REGULATION OF TRANSPORTATION SERVICE.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I present a petition in the form of a letter from the attorney of the American National Live Stock Association and the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas, with accompanying papers, being resolutions adopted by the American Live Stock Association which recently convened at Denver, Colo., and the Cattle Raisers' Association, of Texas, at its annual convention at Fort Worth, Tex., as well as a resolution adopted by the Trans-Mississippi Congress which recently held a session at Muskogee, Okla. I ask that the letter with the accompanying resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. They relate to the urgent necessity for the passage of an act of Congress on the subject of compelling the railroad companies to furnish cars to shippers, and I invite the attention of the committee specially to these papers.

There being no objection, the letter and accompanying resolutions were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1907.

Hon. C. A. CULBERSON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the request of the live-stock interest which I represent, I herewith hand you a copy of a resolution adopted by the American National Live Stock Association at the last annual convention, at Denver, Colo., January 23, 1907, which in substance was also adopted by the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas at its annual convention at Fort Worth, Tex., March 20, 1907, indorsing Senate bill 7887, introduced by you at the last session of Congress, defining the duties of common carriers with respect to furnishing cars to shippers, exchanging cars between themselves, and regulating the transportation service, fixing penalties for failure of such duties, and for like purposes, which bill has been reintroduced in the Senate at this session, numbered S. 483, and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I am directed by these organizations to request that these resolutions be presented to the Senate of the United States as the expression of the live-stock producers and shippers demanding relief from an intolerable condition, and will therefore thank you to have the same read in the Senate and such action taken thereon as is appropriate. A number of State and local associations of stockmen have during this year indorsed the same idea, and the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress passed a resolution of similar import at its meeting at Muskogee November 20, 1907.

In submitting these resolutions permit me to emphasize it that these organizations are thoroughly representative of the great live-stock producing interests of the trans-Mississippi country, where is produced over 72 per cent of the cattle and 75 per cent of the sheep and 52 per cent of the hogs of the United States, and probably 90 per cent of the surplus which supplies our domestic and foreign trade. They speak the sentiments of the farm producer as well as for the range producer from Texas to Montana and from the Mississippi to the Pacific.

The American National Live Stock Association is composed of State and local associations and individuals from nearly all of the Western States and from the Territories, while the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas represents its members, cattle raisers in all the Southwestern States and Territories, who do business of shipping throughout the West and to markets.

We do not know in what better way we can make their wishes known than through unanimous resolutions expressive of the facts and of our desires. We stand ready to prove the facts as stated.

Permit me to say further that the conditions of live-stock transportation have not, on the whole, improved over last year; though there may have been improvement on some lines, yet it has become worse on others.

The stockmen of the country do not subscribe to the idea that no law should be enacted for further regulation of railways to afford the shipper a fair and reasonable service for a fair price because of financial stringency. If, as contended, the roads are less able to comply with such requirements because of financial stringency, what is to be said for the stockman who is less able to stand the loss and injury to his business from the same cause? Shall that cause be pleaded to exempt the carrier and leave the shipper the bag to hold?

Investigation will show that earnings on the whole are greater rather than less since the regulating laws were enacted, and so it is with rates. The contrary contention is without foundation, except possible isolated cases. A free exchange of cars between the roads is one of the main purposes of the bill and will be of great advantage to the roads.

We shall thank you to present these resolutions to the Senate.

Very respectfully,

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL LIVE STOCK ASSOCIATION,
THE CATTLE RAISERS' ASSOCIATION OF TEXAS,
By S. H. COWAN, Attorney.

Resolution to require railroads to promptly furnish cars, etc.

Whereas many of the railroads have failed to supply themselves with sufficient facilities to perform their duties as common carriers in receiving and transporting freight throughout the western half of the United States, where live-stock raising and feeding and shipping is a most extensive and important industry, and have failed to furnish cars in which live stock could be shipped to market to such an extent that tens of thousands of cattle and sheep could not during the past season be marketed; and have failed to supply cars for such great length of time after orders have been given therefor that a large proportion of the live stock marketed were so much delayed, generally for weeks, and in so many instances for months, that they lost seriously in flesh and condition; and after cars were supplied and live stock loaded have moved to the same at such slow rate of speed and otherwise delayed shipments as to seriously damage such live stock; and

Whereas this treatment of the live-stock industry of the country has been growing worse year by year and has cost the producers millions of dollars, reaching the appalling condition during the past season of forcing many shippers practically out of the business, probably bankrupting some and seriously injuring and demoralizing the entire live-stock business, particularly in the Southwest; and

Whereas there are as a whole more stock cars and have been fewer shipments the past season than heretofore, and it is our belief from observation, experience, and from what we can ascertain, that there has been a reckless indifference of the railroad management in the localities where this disastrous condition has existed in supplying themselves with stock cars or in utilizing what they have been able to obtain, to transport live stock, either permitting the cars to stand idle, as has often been the case, or using them in transporting other traffic at a time when live stock was being held for shipment and fast depreciating in value, thereby producing a wanton destruction of property; and

Whereas there exists no adequate means of compelling the railroads to perform their duty to furnish cars and perform the transportation service in a reasonable time, if at all, and no means of securing adequate redress for failure of the railroads to perform those duties, where they fail to do so; and

Whereas there is no way by which one railroad can compel its connections to exchange empty cars for loaded cars of live stock, or to receive and forward live stock in the cars in which they are loaded; and

Whereas the refusal of railroads to permit cars to go off their own line and to deliver cars to other lines has to a great extent impaired the efficiency of the cars which should be available, and placed it beyond the power of many railroads to secure cars or a return of cars or exchange of cars and in this way demoralized the railroad service; and

Whereas it is our earnest belief concurred in by all those who investigate the subject, that the free exchange of cars and the through and rapid transportation of live stock is the only way in which this unbearable condition can be relieved; and

Whereas we believe that if left to themselves the railroads will not better conditions, at least not relieve them, in the absence of some law which compels a free exchange and intercourse of cars to enable each road to get back empty cars for loaded cars delivered to its connection, and a law which fixes penalties to compel the furnishing of cars to shippers, and the exchange and interchange as between railroads; and

Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by the Hon. C. A. CULBERSON, United States Senator from Texas, a bill numbered S. 7887 declaring it to be the duty of railroads subject to the act to regulate commerce to provide sufficient facilities to perform with dispatch their duties as common carriers in furnishing cars and transporting all freight, including live stock, and to promptly transport same, and to exchange loaded and empty cars, and otherwise to provide sufficient facilities, fixing penalties for failure of such duties, and giving to the shipper the right to recover in any court of any State or Territory having jurisdiction his damages and attorney's fees, and, in case of failure to furnish cars for shipping live stock, double the damages sustained; and also empowering the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce penalties for violation of the act, and to make rules and regulations with respect to the time and manner of giving notice for cars, furnishing cars, exchange and interchange of cars, and all needful rules and regulations in the administration of such law and to compel its observance, and providing rules applicable to the different classes and kind of freight and the varying circumstances and conditions of shipment; and

Whereas we believe that the enactment of said bill into law will speedily remedy the deplorable conditions herein set forth, and that some such measure is imperatively necessary; Now therefore be it

Resolved by the American National Live Stock Association in convention assembled at Denver, Colo., January 22 and 23, 1907, That we heartily indorse said bill and recommend to our Senator and Congressmen from all the Western States from which this association draws its membership that the same be passed; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be promptly printed and sent to each of the Western Senators and Congressmen, with the request that the same be read in both the Senate and House of Representatives as the expression of this convention; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy thereof be sent to President Roosevelt as the expression of this convention, with the request he submit to Congress a special message urging an enactment of such a law; and be it further

Resolved, That said bill be printed by the secretary of the association and furnished the members thereof, with the request that they write their respective Senators and Members of Congress urging the enactment thereof.

Duties of railroads.

Resolved by the Trans-Mississippi Congress in annual convention assembled at Muskogee, November 19 to 22, That we urgently insist that the Congress of the United States enact a law defining the duties of common carriers to deliver to shippers at point of shipment in reasonable time cars for shipment of freight as interstate commerce and carry and deliver the same to the connecting lines in reasonable time or to destination, fixing penalties for such failure of duty; and to deliver in reasonable time after demand to their connecting lines as many suitable cars for similar freight as is delivered loaded for shipment such cars by the connecting line demanding such cars, fixing penalties for such failure of duty, and making the carriers each liable to shippers who may be damaged by the failure of such carriers to demand or deliver in pursuance thereof such cars.

Adopted by Trans-Mississippi Congress, November 20, 1907, annual convention at Muskogee.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 122) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

GRAZING UPON THE PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BURKETT. I introduce a bill and move its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as that committee had charge of the subject last year.

The bill (S. 2968) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

On motion of Mr. BURKETT, it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 2968) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States be printed for the use of the Senate.

INVESTIGATION OF RECENT MINING DISASTERS.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 18) appointing a commission to investigate the recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that the joint resolution may be read at length.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a commission is hereby created, consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Said commission shall make full inquiry, examination, and investigation into the recent explosions in coal mines in the States of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Alabama, and other States. For the purpose of said inquiry, examination, and investigation, said commission is authorized to send for persons and papers, make all necessary travel, and through the chairman of the commission or any member thereof to administer oaths and to examine witnesses and papers respecting all matters pertaining to the subject, and to employ necessary clerical and other assistance. Said commission shall report to the Congress the conclusions reached by it and make such recommendations as in its judgment may seem proper. Such sums of money as may be necessary for the said inquiry, examination, and investigation are hereby appropriated and authorized to be paid out of money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on vouchers approved by the chairman of said commission.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I should like to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and if possible to have a prompt report. I am receiving a great many letters and telegrams in regard to the great mine disasters which have occurred recently, and the people think it is time that there should be some investigation made in order to discover if possible where the blame rests.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

WILLIAM C. ECKSTEIN.

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $56 to reimburse William C. Eckstein, a clerk at fire department headquarters, District of Columbia, for amounts erroneously paid by him, etc., intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON [for Mr. GORE] it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the joint resolution (S. R. 15) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that Senators shall be elected by the people of the several States be printed.

ADDITIONAL CONGRESSMEN IN OKLAHOMA.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON [for Mr. GORE] it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 2290) providing for two additional Congressmen in Oklahoma be printed.

EXPENSES OF OKLAHOMA CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON [for Mr. GORE] it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 2289) making appropriations to defray the expenses of the constitutional convention of the Territory of Oklahoma and the expenses of holding an election for the ratification of the constitution and election of State and other officials, $150,000, be printed.

SURVEYS OF FLATHEAD AND YELLOWSTONE RIVERS, MONTANA.

Mr. DIXON. I submit two concurrent resolutions and ask for their immediate consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first concurrent resolution sent to the desk by the Senator from Montana will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Flathead River, Montana, from the mouth of the same to the city of Kalispell, with a view of dredging and cleaning out a channel carrying 4 feet of water from the city of Kalispell to the mouth of said river and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. SCOTT. I object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the concurrent resolution will lie over. The Secretary will read for the information of the Senate the second concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the portion of the Yellowstone River from the city of Glendive, Mont., to the mouth of said river with a view of cleaning out the channel thereof so as to maintain a 4-foot stage of water therein, including a lock at the United States Government dam, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Let it take the same course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the concurrent resolution will lie over.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to my colleague the propriety of having the resolutions referred to the Committee on Commerce for consideration. I suppose there will be no objection to that course.

Mr. DIXON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

STATUE OF JABEZ LAMAR MONROE CURRY.

Mr. JOHNSTON submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of Jabez Lamar Monroe Curry, presented by the State of Alabama, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished civic services.

Second, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the governor of Alabama.

THE RAMIE INDUSTRY.

Mr. HEYBURN. I submit a resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That 500 additional copies of Senate Document No. 392 be printed as corrected, with envelopes, and that the incorrect edition now on hand be turned over to S. H. Slaught for use in his work of the promotion of the ramie industry.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in explanation of the resolution I will state that Mr. Slaught at his own expense and trouble prepared this document. It accompanied Senate bill No. 4633 at the last session of Congress. Conditions have arisen which make it desirable to reprint the document. It is one for general information upon a subject in which a great many people are interested, and Mr. Slaught desires to send out those that are on hand which are not correct and to have 500 correct copies printed for use under the rules of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

Mr. FULTON. I send to the desk a copy of the bill (S. 423) to amend section 6 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof. I ask that 500 additional copies of it may be printed. It is a proposed amendment to section 6 of the interstate-commerce act, and I make the further request that the portion which is the amendment may be printed in italics.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 423) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and acts amendatory thereof, be printed with the amendment on pages 4 and 5 in italics.

SALARIES OF CERTAIN POSTMASTERS IN OHIO.

Mr. DICK. I submit a resolution and ask that it may lie on the table.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to report to the Senate the salaries of those who served as postmasters at post-offices in the State of Ohio in biennial terms between July 1, 1864, and June 30, 1874, whose names and periods of service appear in Senate resolution No. 337, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session, the salary of each former postmaster to be stated for each specified term of service by commissions and box rents, as shown by the registered returns of each former postmaster on file in the Sixth Auditor's office, and to show the exact excess of the salary by commissions and box rents over the salary paid in every case where the paid salary is 10 per cent, more or less, than the salary by box rents and commissions; and to comply in all respects with the public order of the Postmaster-General of February 17, 1884, for stating such salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim specified in Senate resolution No. 337, Fifty-seventh Congress, second session.

SALARY ACCOUNTS OF POSTMASTERS.

Mr. DICK. I submit another resolution which I ask may take the same course.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have stated and audited in the Sixth Auditor's office the salary accounts of former postmasters who served at post-offices in the various States and Territories of the United States in terms between July 1, 1864, and July 1, 1874, and who applied to the Postmaster-General, prior to January 1, 1887, for payment of increased salary under the act of March 3, 1883, such salary accounts to be stated upon the registered returns of each postmaster for each term of service specified, and by the method and rule laid down by the Postmaster-General for the statement and payment of salary accounts of former postmasters under the act of March 3, 1883, in his public order of February 16, 1884, directing payment of salaries by commissions and box rents, less the salaries paid at the time of service; and to enable the Secretary of the Treasury the better to comply with this resolution the Postmaster-General is hereby directed to turn over to the Sixth Auditor all the data now in his hands pertaining to each and every such claim; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate as many such stated salary accounts of former postmasters, by States, as soon as they can be made ready during the present session.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I understood on the last day's session that no business would be done to-day except routine business. I understand also that that includes any subject which is not objected to by any Senator. At that session there was a bill of some importance considered. It is very short; it has been read and amended, and is now before the Senate. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that a vote may be taken on the passage of the bill. I believe there is no objection to this course. If there is, of course, it will go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator's understanding with respect to the transaction of business at to-day's session is correct, so far as it relates to routine business. There was nothing said with regard to the consideration of subjects to which there is no objection. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1192) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section No. 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims."

Mr. TELLER. I ask for a final vote on the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] understands that the bill is to be taken up this morning and passed?

Mr. TELLER. I spoke to the Senator from Montana. He does not desire to make any objection, and I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. NELSON. Is the bill to be limited as it was the other day to the States named?

Mr. TELLER. Precisely as it was the other day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been concurred in. If no further amendment be proposed in the Senate, the bill will be ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAN-AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS AT SANTIAGO, CHILE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the respective Houses of the Congress a report of the Secretary of State representing the appropriateness of early action in order that in response to the invitation of the Government of Chile the Government of the United States may be enabled fittingly to be represented at the First Pan-American Scientific Congress to be held at Santiago, Chile, the first ten days of December, 1908.

The recommendations of this report have my hearty approval and I hope that the Congress will see fit to make timely provision to enable the Government to respond appropriately to the invitation of the Government of Chile in the sending of delegates to a congress which can not fail to be of great interest and importance to the governments and peoples of all the American Republics.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

AGRICULTURAL AND GAME PROTECTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper and illustrations, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of Agriculture on the work of the Biological Survey in the interest of agricultural and game protection, prepared in response to the requirements of a provision in the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, together with an estimate of the Public Printer, as provided in public act No. 153, approved March 1, 1907, of the cost of printing the usual number of copies of the report, both with and without the accompanying illustrations.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,

PURCHASE AND DISTRIBUTION OF VALUABLE SEEDS.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 66) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds was read the first time by its title.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a deficiency appropriation, and I understand it is rather important that it should be considered at this time, at least that it would facilitate the operations of the Department if it were passed at once. Therefore

I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read the second time at length for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That to supply a deficiency occasioned by the destruction of the seed warehouse used by the Department of Agriculture in the city of Washington November 6, 1907, in the appropriation "Purchase and distribution of valuable seeds," including each and every object authorized by law and specified in the appropriation of $238,000, except the provision for the purchase of foreign seed, under this title in the "Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," approved March 4, 1907, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, until Monday, January 6, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 21, 1907.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D., as follows:

Father of light and life, justice and mercy, love and liberty, peace and good will, our hearts turn to Thee with inexpressible joy and gratitude at this season of the year, which reminds us of Thine own best gift to the world, through whom Thou didst reveal Thine own heart and through whom Thou didst impart life more abundantly unto Thy children. Help us, we beseech Thee, to forgive our transgressors as we hope at last to be forgiven of Thee.

We thank Thee that the indications now point to the ushering in of that permanent and lasting peace 'twixt all the nations of the earth heralded by the angelic host ages ago, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Let Thy blessing, we beseech Thee, attend the officers, Members, and employees of this House and their respective families as we separate for the holiday season and bring us together at the appointed time in health, strength, and vigor, that we may do the work that Thou hast given us to do in the spirit of Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 19, 1907, was read and approved.

ADMITTING HERNAN ULLOA TO WEST POINT.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to permit Mr Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica, to receive instruction at the Military Academy at West Point: Provided, That no expense shall be caused to the United States thereby and that the said Hernan Ulloa shall agree to comply with all regulations for the police and discipline of the academy, to be studious, and to give his utmost efforts to accomplish the courses in the various departments of instruction: And provided further, That in the case of the said Hernan Ulloa the provisions of sections 1320 and 1321 of the Revised Statutes shall be suspended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this resolution, it involves no expense to the United States Government.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No expense at all. It comes from the Secretary of State in the usual form that has been the custom for at least forty or fifty years. The resolution expressly declares there shall be no expense to the United States. The Secretary of War reports that there are accommodations that can be furnished. It is simply the courtesy that has always been extended to these little republics without costing the Government anything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Crook, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed joint resolution of the following title:

On December 19, 1907:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 58) to pay the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1907, on the 21st day of said month.

AGRICULTURAL AND GAME PROTECTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, together with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of Agriculture on the work of the Biological Survey in the interest of agricultural and game protection, prepared in response to the requirements of a provision in the act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, together with an estimate of the Public Printer, as provided in public act No. 153, approved March 1, 1907, of the cost of printing the usual number of copies of the report, both with and without the accompanying illustrations.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 21, 1907.

PRINTING AND BINDING FOR COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 1.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 1 shall be, and is hereby, authorized during the Sixtieth Congress to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken and the resolution was agreed to.

SITTINGS OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS NO. 1.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections No. 1 in the Sixtieth Congress be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to the House whether it is a wise plan to give from time to time this permission to sit without regard to the sittings of the House. For instance, Mr. Speaker, when this permission is given, how could the Speaker secure a quorum? The Speaker could not arrest a man who is permitted by action of the House to absent himself. I think that in every call of the House, if this practice is continued, it will be necessary first to vacate all of the permissions to be absent. I have seen it going on from time to time and have often thought it ought to be objected to. It prevents a quorum. It prevents a number of gentlemen from being here who ought to be in this Chamber. It gives an excuse, and I doubt whether it is a wise policy.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with my friend from Iowa. I have the honor to serve under him in what I consider the most important committee of the House, and I believe that committee has never asked consent to sit during the sessions of the House and does not make a practice of doing so, but in an election committee there is quite a different practice prevailing, and it is quite necessary to have it where the election committee has argument of an election case before it. It considers the case exactly as judges do upon the bench, and it is not desirable to interrupt the argument any further than necessary. These election committees do not sit during the sessions of the House, except when necessary for hearing arguments upon an election case.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from Illinois know that a quorum of all the members of his committee will be present?

Mr. MANN. I did not understand the question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I say, does the gentleman know that all the members of his committeee will be present. I understand it is proposed to sit during the holidays——

Mr. MANN. Of course the committee never goes to work without a quorum being present.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you not think the resolution ought to be changed so as to compel those who are on these holiday committees to stay here and work.

Mr. MANN. This resolution does not prevent anyone from going home or requiring anybody to stay here; it has nothing to do with that question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose all the members of the committee go home except the chairman, what will the chairman of the committee——

Mr. MANN. This resolution has nothing to do with sitting during the holidays or during the vacation. Is is purely a resolution to permit the Committee on Elections No. 1 to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me a minute?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not make an objection—I did not hear its wording when read, though I listened—but the gentleman has yielded me a minute or two. I quite agree with what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has said. I have thought several times of objecting to permitting these committees to sit during the holidays and at the same time Congress agree that it adjourn, which means adjourn and go home. We know that some of the Members will stay here, as they often do. We know that the majority go home to spend the holidays, and that is why we have holidays. I have thought it unwise for us to adjourn so many days before the holidays. I have thought we should have had shorter holidays and particularly that we should get to work on currency legislation, because the people expect us to relieve them by some legislation, and at once. We should try at least, and at once. Now we have been here nearly a whole month and have done practically nothing, and mighty little of that. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I say with all seriousness the American people think that long since we should have throttled the thieves who have imposed this panic upon the innocent people of this country and upon the banks of the country [applause on Democratic side], which has made them victims of Wall street, begging like Lazarus——

Mr. PAYNE. To what is the gentleman from Tennessee addressing his remarks?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I expect more than the gentleman from New York—those in Wall street—will laugh at what I say, but that does not and will not deter me in what I say, about these men who have imposed this outrage upon the people of this country, the plain people who are not responsible for this highwayman's act, imposing a panic as they have upon the defenseless people of this country. I say we should stay here throughout the holidays and by legislation, if it be possible, free the people of this country from the outrage of these vultures. I myself am compelled to go home because of illness of members of my mother's family; but I am willing, even under these circumstances, to beg off from that high mission, if possible, and stay here and all do our duty, not as Democrats or as Republicans, but as American citizens representing a free but enslaved people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF HOUSE ROOMS.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixtieth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, has that been usual?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir. This resolution has been passed in several Congresses.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. DIXON was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of James McGrath, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order previously made, the House adjourned until January 6, 1908.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 6, 1908.

Rev. EDWARD E. HALE, Chaplain of the Senate, offered the following prayer:

*The people that sat in darkness saw a great light; and to them who sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up. * * * Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in His wings. * * * Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand.*

Father of light, Father of love, in the midst of darkness Thou wert pleased to reveal Thyself to all sorts and conditions of men—to all Thy children. The Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in His wings. From day to day and from year to year this world is coming nearer and nearer to its God.

And here are we, Father. Thy servants are sent to do Thy will, to enter into Thy service, that service which is perfect freedom, that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will may be done here on earth as in heaven.

As the year begins, Father, as these Christmas solemnities go by, we come to Thee as so many children of the living God, asking Thee that we may be strong with Thy strength, that we may speak as His servants, that we may enter into Thy kingdom.

Hear us and answer us as Thy children.

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 21, 1907, when, on request of Mr. TALIAFERRO, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR STEPHEN R. MALLORY.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, it has become my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, the Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY, at his home in Pensacola, at 12.48 o'clock on the morning of December 23 last.

At some future day I will ask the Senate to set aside a time to pay fitting tribute to his memory. I ask now the passage of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks for the adoption of resolutions, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. STEPHEN RUSSELL MALLORY, late a Senator from the State of Florida.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the Senator from Florida.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. As a further mark of respect to the memory of my deceased colleague, I move that the Senate now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 7, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 6, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The following prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.:

O Thou God and Father of us all, above all, through all, and in us all, we bless Thee for the season just passed into history, with its sacred memories and hallowed associations, which filled our hearts and homes with love and good cheer, knitting together more firmly the ties of kinship, strengthening the bonds of friendship, enlarging our vision, and widening the sphere of fraternity to all mankind.

We thank Thee that Thou hast brought us together again without the loss of any, and we most fervently pray that as we take up the work of a new year we may dwell together in unity. So rule and overrule in all our hearts that the spark of divinity which binds us to Thee may dominate our being, that we may press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 21, 1907, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF NEW MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the credentials of Hon. C. Bascom Slemp, elected a Member of the House for the Ninth Congressional District of Virginia to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Campbell Slemp.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. Slemp, is present, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. Slemp appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

PROPOSED CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have a bill which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce referred to a committee that has little for its consideration. It is the bill introduced by myself (H. R. 11346) to compel and require railroad companies to cooperate with shippers upon inland navigable waters. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states that, after examination, the bill was referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be discharged from the consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to that.

Mr. MANN. Until I have examined the bill, at least, I shall object.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have not examined the bill up to this time, and for the present I object.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to say to the gentlemen that it is not because I wish to withdraw the bill from that committee, but that committee is overloaded with bills, and they will not miss this little bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not understand how fast that committee can work.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to make one other suggestion by way of appeal. What I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois is that this little Committee of Railways and Canals has a place on the schedule but none on the reference, and it does seem to me that they might have one bill referred to them without objection by the committee whose shoulders are overloaded.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I object for the present.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith the annual report of the Secretary of War for the year 1907.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1907.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 66) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (S. 1192) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section No. 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. STEPHEN RUSSELL MALLORY, late a Senator from the State of Florida.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

FRANCHISES GRANTED IN PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of section 32 of the act of April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes" (31 Stat., 77), I transmit herewith copy of a franchise, granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to J. G. White & Co. (Incorporated).

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1908.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of section 32 of the act of April 12, 1900, entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes" (31 Stat., 77), I transmit herewith copy of a franchise, granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to Antonio Roig, entitled "An ordinance granting to Antonio Roig an extension of six months for the completion of a railway authorized to be constructed and operated by a franchise passed on the 8th day of August, 1905."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1908.

FIRST PAN-AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the respective Houses of the Congress a report of the Secretary of State, representing the appropriateness of early action in order that in response to the invitation of the Government of Chile the Government of the United States may be enabled fittingly to be represented at the First Pan-American Scientific Congress, to be held at Santiago, Chile, the first ten days of December, 1908.

The recommendations of this report have my hearty approval, and I hope that the Congress will see fit to make timely provision to enable the Government to respond appropriately to the invitation of the Government of Chile in the sending of delegates to a congress which can not fail to be of great interest and importance to the Governments and peoples of all the American Republics.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 21, 1907.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS OF 1910.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In the taking of the census of 1910 it will probably be necessary to employ about 4,000 additional persons in the temporary force at Washington. I urge upon the Congress that in the enactment of a law for the taking of the census provision be made that these persons be selected in accordance with the civil-service rules. The Civil Service Commission is amply able through its regular examinations to promptly supply all needed eligibles having the requisite qualifications.

The noncompetitive examinations used in selecting the force at Washington of the last two censuses served only as a cloak to hide the nakedness of the spoils system. Such examinations are useless as checks upon patronage appointments. They prevent the most incompetent from being appointed, but they do not secure the appointment of the most competent, and they afford no check upon political appointments. It is idle to say that such examinations are fair, for the unfairness and favoritism come in in the choosing of the men who shall be allowed to try them. The great majority of the clerical employees of the last two censuses were far below the average of the persons appointed through competitive examinations in like grades. Statistics prepared on this point show that only about 50 per cent of the applicants who were employed in the last census were able to pass the competitive examinations under the civil-service rules, while of all other applicants for the same examinations throughout the country about 67 per cent passed. As appointments are made under the competitive system from those highest in grade, there is even a much wider margin of difference in intelligence and clerical capacity between the two classes than these figures indicate. Much of the value of a census depends upon the faith of the public in it. The taint of the spoils system will not merely hamper and delay the economical and efficient taking of the census, but will impair the belief of the public in its honesty.

These additional employees are certain to seek to be retained in the permanent service at the close of taking the census. If they are selected for the temporary force upon a patronage basis it will be unjust and improper to give them preference over those of superior merit having claims under the civil-service law; and yet the very men who now most strongly object to having these employees put under the civil-service law will then endeavor in every way to secure their transfer to the service protected by that law. This has been the unfailing experience of the past. When a branch of the public service is by law exempted from the operations of the civil-service law, so as to admit persons without regard thereto, the strongest pressure is certain to come later from the very individuals who secured the passage of the exemption law to have those they exempted transferred to the classified service. This effort is being made every day. It is proof positive that all these branches of the public service like the Census should be put without qualification under the civil-service law.

I invite attention to the following letter from the Civil Service Commission and to the quotations contained in it from former Commissioners of the Census:

"DECEMBER 21, 1907.

"The PRESIDENT:

"The bill to provide for the new census (H. R. 7597) provides that the additional employees shall be appointed upon 'such noncompetitive examination as the Director of the Census, in cooperation with the United States Civil Service Commission, may prescribe, the examinations to be held under the direction of said Commission * * *.' Persons having previous experience in census work are excepted from examinations, and the permanent force may be recruited from the temporary force. This proposed legislation is only slightly less vicious than previous census laws. By its noncompetitive feature it permits of the places being apportioned as patronage; and although the persons recommended must be examined, the examinations are not open to public competition. Persons thus appointed for patronage reasons, including persons appointed for the same reasons in previous census work, may be continued in the permanent force. This suspension of the competitive system and the substitution of the patronage system not merely in the temporary force but in the permanent force, which is now subject to competition, opens the door for the removal of persons appointed under the rules to make places for persons appointed by strong political influence. This provision is not merely a backward step, but will inflict a grave blow upon the merit system and discredit competitive examinations. It was only with great difficulty and with your very earnest support that the House provision to allow the temporary employees of the last census to be made eligible to appointment in the classified service without examination was modified.

"Hon. Carroll D. Wright, when Commissioner of the Census, stated that the absence of civil-service rules made an extra cost of $2,000,000, and afterwards said:

"'The above statements more than justify the opinion which I expressed in the report on a plan for a permanent census service, for instead of an extra cost of $2,000,000, to which I guardedly limited myself, it is apparent that under the first comparison there was an extra cost of $6,421,245 and under the second comparison of $3,372,025. The magnitude of the census work, the lack of time for preparation, the temporary nature of the force, etc., may properly, and perhaps sufficiently, account for the extraordinary expense above the $2,000,000 which I have attributed to the absence of civil-service rules.

"'The figures which I have given thoroughly justify the opinion Mr. Porter expressed to me several years ago, that it would have been much better had the Eleventh Census been taken in accordance with civil-service rules, an opinion he has now given to the public in an interesting article in the North American Review for the current month (December, 1897), in which he gives as one of the faults of the system under which censuses have been taken "the placing upon the shoulders of the Superintendent, whose mind should be fully occupied with his experts in planning the work, the responsibility of the appointment of an office force of several thousand of clerks."'

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

"JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1908.

The message was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CUSHMAN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. LAMAR of Florida, until January 20, on account of sickness.

To Mr. COCKS of New York, for five days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. CALDWELL, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. BARTLETT of Nevada, until January 23, on account of business.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, January 6, 1908.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics and Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic.

Very respectfully,

GEORGE H. LINDSAY,
Member of Congress, Second District of New York.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON VENTILATION AND ACOUSTICS.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics shall be, and is hereby, authorized during the Sixtieth Congress to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

DISTRIBUTION OF COMMITTEE ROOMS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I present a partial report from the Special Committee on Distribution of Rooms.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois presents the following report from the Committee on Distribution of Rooms, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee which was directed to report to the House plans for the distribution of rooms in the House office building and the redistribution of rooms under the control of the House in the Capitol building beg leave to make a further partial report and to recommend the adoption of the following resolution, to wit:

Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms in accordance with the numbers on the plats accompanying House resolution No. 53, passed by the House December 19, 1907, be, and is hereby, made, and the rooms now occupied by the committees named shall be vacated by such committees so soon as the rooms newly assigned are ready for use, to wit:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the report.

The question was taken, and the report was adopted.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA MILITARY CADETS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a request for a change of reference of House Document 377 from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, what is that document?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, recommending legislation increasing the number of District of Columbia cadets in the Military Academy.

The SPEAKER. The request is for a change of reference from the Committee on the District of Columbia to the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following privileged report. I do not desire to have the report read, but I would like to have the resolution printed and go over. I understand the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] desires to make some motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand this will go over with all the parliamentary privileges.

Mr. PAYNE. I simply desire to have the resolution printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEATH OF SENATOR MALLORY.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the House has just heard of the death of the distinguished senior Senator from Florida, the Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY. At some future time the Florida delegation will ask the House to set apart a day in order that the Members may pay tribute to the distinguished public services of this illustrious son of Florida. At the present time I offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY, a Senator of the United States from the State of Florida.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania, from the Special Joint Committee on Revision of the Penal Laws, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 2), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. Res. 22) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to inform the House relative to the collection of the cotton tax, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 3), which said resolution and report were laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9531) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Rollins—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10070) for the relief of James H. Shannon—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (H. R. 1489) granting a pension to Paul Kerr—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HEMENWAY presented a memorial of the Commercial Club of Richmond, Ind., which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following is a copy of a report made by a committee appointed by the president of the Commercial Club to investigate the subject of parcels post as proposed by the Postmaster-General, the Hon. George von L. Meyer. This report was adopted by the club, and the resolution attached was also adopted:

COMMITTEE REPORT.

The subcommittee selected from a general committee to look into the proposed parcels-post legislation beg leave to make the following report:

The Postmaster-General's request in his letter to this club, under date of November 2, 1907, asks for the comments and criticisms of this club on his proposed parcels-post measure.

It is the purpose of this committee to confine this short statement to just how this proposed legislation will affect the business interests of Richmond and immediate vicinity, because this is the field this club is supposed to protect and foster. That it is our judgment that for the main part at least this is the information the Postmaster-General wants, and for that reason he has asked the Commercial Club for their opinion of the proposed measure.

There is a deficiency at the present time in the postal service each year of over $10,000,000. Under this proposed change this deficit would be greatly increased. This deficit, as it is, does not flatter the postal management, and to increase it for the benefit of a small class of traders in cities would be the worst kind of class legislation.

Now, as to the effect on the local retail merchant. The retail merchant does not care to do a mail-order business. He does not carry a stock that can be catalogued successfully. His business depends on his customers coming to his store. Mail orders to local merchants means a credit business, whether the orders come by mail or by telephone, and a credit business of this kind is unsatisfactory, as every retailer in this city will verify.

If the local retailer should go into the mail-order business, and thus tend to keep trade from coming to his place of business, Main street would be changed.

The saving to the local merchant in postage, as business is now conducted, would be very little. At the present time the rural carrier is allowed to deliver goods on his route with or without pay as he chooses. Under this new law all this is stopped.

The local merchant gets no benefit in obtaining supplies of goods for his own use, as this does not apply to wholesale quantities.

The wholesaler and, in most cases, the manufacturer depends upon the retail merchant. If he is successful, they are prosperous. If the retail merchant's business declines, the wholesaler shares in the depression.

The fact that the wholesale interests of the entire country are against the parcels post is evident conclusion that it will be detrimental to the retail merchant, and the retail and wholesale interests are the life and backbone of our city.

We believe that any intelligent farmer who studies the full effect and meaning of a domestic parcels post will condemn it. The wise farmer knows that his home market is his best friend. He knows that when his home town is filled with life and trade he shares in this prosperity.

The mail-order houses have had unbounded prosperity in the past at a 16-cent mail rate. Now reduce this 25 per cent, or to 12 cents, and they will profit still more. A certain mail-order house will save $40,000 a year alone on mailing their catalogue by this reduction.

Parcels post encourages long-distance transactions, which is a condition that merchants in cities of our size and smaller have been trying to discourage as a matter of self-protection.

Is there a demand for a domestic parcels post? If so, from what source?

The farmer is not demanding it. The laboring man is not demanding it. Practically every jobbers' and manufacturers' association of the United States are in accord against it. Who have we left as being for it? The answer is plain.

It is the conviction of your committee that the passage of a domestic parcels-post bill such as proposed would be detrimental to the business interests of our city in that the disadvantages far outweigh the advantages of such proposed legislation: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Richmond Commercial Club is opposed to the passage of a domestic parcels-post measure, such as proposed by our Postmaster-General.

COMMITTEE.

Mr. HEMENWAY presented a petition of sundry citizens of Elkhart, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to create a volunteer retired list for the surviving officers of the civil war, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented memorials of Post G, Indiana Division of Travelers' Protective Association, of Terre Haute; of the Fort Wayne Commercial Exchange, of Fort Wayne; of the Merchants' Protective Association of Montpelier, and of Post V, Travelers' Protective Association, of Laporte, all in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

UNIVERSITY OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I present a paper which is an appeal of the members of the executive council of the National University committee of four hundred in behalf of the proposed university of the United States. It is a very valuable paper, and I move that it be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 485) to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2694) to authorize the construction of a drawbridge over the Black River in Lawrence County, Ark., reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2662) to authorize the Arizona and California Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Colorado River at Parker, Ariz.;

A bill (S. 2725) to extend the time for completion of the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the village of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.; and

A bill (S. 2929) to authorize the Idaho and Washington Northern Railroad to construct a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington.

COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. OVERMAN. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back, without amendment, the bill (S. 456) to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C., and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be put on its passage.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that two terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the western district of North Carolina shall be held in each and every year in the town of Salisbury, N. C., beginning, respectively, on the fourth Monday in April and October, to continue till the business is disposed of.

The clerk of the United States district and circuit courts at Statesville, N. C., shall be the clerk of the United States circuit and district courts at Salisbury, and he shall appoint a deputy clerk of that court, to reside at Salisbury, with the usual power of a deputy clerk in such cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. KITTREDGE, from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate or recess of Congress, and that the expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REVISION OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HEYBURN. From the Joint Committee on the Revision and Codification of the Laws of the United States I desire to report a bill, and I submit with it the report of the committee, which is in part 1 and part 2. It is a partial report and comprises the Title of Crimes alone.

The bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States was read twice by its title.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. HALE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to submit to the Senate and to the Senator from Maine a proposition which seems to me opportune at this time.

The Joint Committee on the Revision and Codification of the Laws has just reported the criminal code, and the consideration of it is going to occupy a great deal of the time of this body. I therefore propose to ask unanimous consent that instead of adjourning over until a future day, in each instance the Senate shall hold a session subject only to the right to consider this bill, that we may take it up and proceed with the reading of it, which will occupy a long time, and with the consideration of it, which will be a long and tedious undertaking.

I merely ask the Senate to consent to this modification, that we shall not adjourn over, but that the Senate shall remain in session for the sole purpose of the consideration of this measure. Then Senators who desire to be present and to participate in the consideration of the report of the Committee on the Revision and Codification of the Laws will remain, and those who do not feel that their presence would be required will be free to go, knowing that no other business will be taken up for consideration. I think we will have to make some such agreement as that or we will never get the report of the committee considered.

Mr. HALE. My object in making the motion is for the purpose of giving to committees which were announced only near the close of the session before the holiday recess an opportunity for a week or so to work and prepare bills, which is, perhaps, more important than anything else. I do not insist on the motion if there is any business the Senate can engage in, either for the rest of to-day or for to-morrow, but I think it would be in the interest of the dispatch of legislation if we give the committees an opportunity to work and not be called in here every day this week at 12 o'clock.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Even if the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho should be followed hereafter, which I hope will not be the case, because I think we all ought to deal with the question of codification, it would not apply to the motion of the Senator from Maine now, because the report of the Committee on the Revision and Codification of the Laws could not be printed and ready for us by to-morrow.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that, and it was more for the purpose of giving notice of my intention as to the future than to interfere at this time that I rose. I did not intend to interfere with the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the 1st day of June, 1908, every national banking association organized under the act of June 3, 1864, and any act supplementary or amendatory thereof, shall at all times have on hand in lawful money of the United States an amount equal to at least 20 per cent of the aggregate amount of its deposits, and whenever the lawful money of any such association shall be below the amount of 20 per cent of its deposits such association shall not increase its liabilities by making any new loans otherwise than by discounting or purchasing bills of exchange payable at sight. Nor shall such banking association make or pay any dividend of its profits until the required proportion of the aggregate amount of its deposits and its lawful money of the United States so intended to be held in reserve shall have been fully restored, and the Comptroller of the Currency shall notify any such association whose lawful money reserves are below the amount required to be kept on hand to make good such reserves, and if such association shall fail for thirty days thereafter to make good its reserves of lawful money the Comptroller of the Currency shall, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treasury, proceed to wind up the business of such association, as provided in section 5234 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

No part of the lawful money reserves which such national banking association is hereby required to have on hand in lawful money of the United States shall consist of anything but lawful money of the United States actually in the possession and custody of such national banking association.

All acts and parts of acts providing for the establishment or creation of central reserve banks, reserve banks, or additional reserve banks are hereby repealed, and any such central reserve banks, reserve banks, or additional reserve banks as may have been heretofore created and be now existing shall on or before the 30th day of June, 1908, pay and return to the respective banks to which such moneys may belong all the moneys which such reserve banks may hold or have in their possession or under their control to the credit of any other national banking association as a part of the lawful reserves of such other national banking association.

No national banking association shall after the passage of this act deposit any part of its lawful money reserve herein provided to be maintained and kept with any other bank or banking association or elsewhere than in the vaults of the national banking association to which such reserve may belong.

All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. HANSBROUGH introduced a bill (S. 3045) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1903," which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to introduce three bills on the subject of the national banks, and as they are comparatively short I ask that they may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

With reference to one of these bills—that is, the bill to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking act, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, and for other purposes—I desire to say that I am not unmindful of the constitutional provision which requires bills for raising revenue to originate in the House of Representatives. I invite the attention of the Committee on Finance, to which the bill will go, to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Nebeker case, in 167, and in the Millard case, in 202, United States Supreme Court Reports, for its consideration. If the bill ought not to originate here, it will at least express my personal opinion as to what legislation on that line should be enacted at the present session.

The bill (S. 3026) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking act, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3026) to amend section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking act, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking act, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1907, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That section 5153 of the Revised Statutes be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5153. All national banking associations, designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be depositaries of public money, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary; and they may also be employed as financial agents of the Government; and they shall perform all such reasonable duties, as depositaries of public money and financial agents of the Government, as may be required of them. The Secretary of the Treasury shall require the associations thus designated to give satisfactory security, by the deposit of United States bonds and otherwise, for the safe-keeping and prompt payment of the public money deposited with them, and for the faithful performance of their duties as financial agents of the Government: Provided, That the Secretary shall, on or before the 1st of January of each year, make a public statement of the securities required during that year for such deposits. And every association so designated as receiver or depositary of the public money shall take and receive at par all of the national currency bills, by whatever association issued, which have been paid into the Government for internal revenue, or for loans or stocks: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections: Provided further, That whenever public money is deposited in national banks under authority of this section, said banks shall pay to the United States interest on such deposits, to be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows: For the months of August, September, October and November of each year, at the rate of 2 per cent per annum; for the months of December, January, February, and March of each year at the rate of 4 per cent per annum; and for the months of April, May, June, and July of each year at the rate of 6 per cent per annum."

The bill (S. 3027) to require national banks to have and keep on hand in their vaults the reserve required by law, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act every national bank shall have and keep on hand in its vaults the reserve of lawful money provided for by law. All laws and parts of laws which authorize national banks to have and keep part of their reserve with other national banks, and all laws and parts of laws otherwise in conflict herewith, are hereby repealed.

The bill (S. 3028) to further protect deposits in national banks, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 3028) to further protect deposits in national banks, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That in every case where any national bank which accepts the provisions of this act becomes insolvent or is unable to pay its deposits in whole or in part, all national banks which shall accept the provisions of this act shall pay whatever may be due the depositors of such bank which it is unable immediately to pay and the amount to be paid by each of said banks shall be in proportion to the combined capital and surplus of each, as shown by the statement of the condition of the banks made to the Comptroller of the Currency next preceding the insolvency or failure to pay deposits. By deposits as herein used is meant individual deposits subject to check and which bear no interest: Provided, however, That such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from and after such insolvency or failure to pay deposits until paid.

SEC. 2. That whenever any national bank which accepts the provisions of this act shall become insolvent or is unable to pay its deposits in whole or in part it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency, in addition to the duties now devolved upon him by law with reference to insolvent or failed banks, as speedily as practicable to assess all national banks which have accepted the provisions of this act their pro rata of the indebtedness due depositors by such bank, as provided in the foregoing section, and to collect and pay the same to the depositors entitled thereto. The necessary expenses incident to the enforcement of this act shall be paid as in other cases of insolvent or failed banks: Provided, That the depositors shall be paid in full: Provided further, That after exhausting all the resources of such insolvent or failed bank and the liabilities of the stockholders therein and paying all necessary expenses incident to the settlement of the affairs of such bank, the Comptroller of the Currency shall refund to the respective banks which contributed their pro rata to the payment of the deposits in such insolvent or failed bank the balance, if any, in proportion to the contributions of such banks.

SEC. 3. That immediately after the passage of this act the Comptroller of the Currency shall address a communication to each national bank then in operation, inclosing a copy of this act, inquiring if the bank will accept the provisions thereof. All communications of the banks in reply to such inquiry shall be filed and preserved by the Comptroller of the Currency as part of the archives of his office. The banks which accept the provisions of this act shall be held and bound thereby and the liability may be enforced by the Comptroller of the Currency. In case any bank shall decline to accept the provisions of this act, or shall fail to reply to the communication of the Comptroller of the Currency on the subject within twenty days, such bank and the depositors therein shall be denied all benefits arising under this act: Provided, That as additional national banks are organized they shall have ten days from the date of their charters to avail themselves of the provisions of this act, and upon failure to file their acceptance thereof within that time such banks and their depositors shall be denied all benefits arising thereunder.

SEC. 4. That as acceptances of the provisions of this act are received by the Comptroller of the Currency, it shall be his duty to issue to each bank which accepts the same a certificate under his hand and seal, stating substantially the fact of acceptance and said certificate shall expressly state that the deposits of the bank are further protected by this act, which certificate may be published by the bank. It shall also be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency to transmit to the Congress, at the beginning of each session, the name and location of each national bank which has accepted the provisions of this act and the name and location of each national bank which has declined or failed to accept the same.

SEC. 5. That no public money shall be deposited or remain in any national bank which declines or fails to accept the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That nothing in this act shall be taken, held, or construed as implying or fixing any liability upon the United States to guarantee deposits in any national bank, and it is hereby declared that the extent of the obligation of the United States is to enforce this act.

PROPOSED TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 3163) to create a tariff commission, which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, just a word upon this bill. It will be found upon reading that it is drafted on most conservative possible lines. It does not go a great deal further than Congress in the past has already gone. I think enough tariff commission bills will be introduced, and I desire to say that I am not wedded to this or any other particular plan, and if any other bill or any other suggestion shall come up which seems to accomplish the purpose of merely finding out the facts to aid Congress in legislating when the question may arise I shall be glad, so far as my vote is concerned, to adopt it in preference to my own bill, if it seems more advisable.

I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. BEVERIDGE, it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 3163) to create a tariff commission be printed for the use of the Senate.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I introduce a bill and ask that it may be read at length, so that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, as follows:

A bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Be it enacted, etc., That any national banking association which has circulating notes outstanding, secured by the deposit of United States bonds to an amount of not less than 50 per cent of its capital stock, and which has a surplus of not less than 20 per cent, may make application to the Comptroller of the Currency for authority to issue additional circulating notes to be secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States. The Comptroller of the Currency, if in his judgment business conditions demand such additional circulation and the condition of the association making the application warrants the issue, may approve such application, and shall determine the time of issue and shall fix the amount, within the limitations hereinafter imposed, of such additional circulating notes to be issued. Whenever after receiving notice of such approval any such association shall deposit with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States such of the bonds described in section 2 of this act as shall be approved in character and amount by the Treasurer of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be entitled to receive, upon the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned as provided by law, equal in amount to 75 per cent of the market value, as fixed by the Treasurer of the United States, of the bonds so deposited, such additional circulating notes to be used, held, and treated in the same way as circulating notes of national banking associations heretofore issued and secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and shall be subject to all the provisions of law affecting such notes: Provided, That the amount of such additional circulating notes delivered at any time to any association shall not in any case exceed the limit fixed for such issue by the Comptroller of the Currency: And provided further, That the total amount of circulating notes outstanding of any national banking association, secured by United States bonds or otherwise, shall not at any time exceed the amount of its unimpaired capital and surplus: And provided further, That there shall not be outstanding at any time circulating notes issued under the provisions of this act to an amount of more than $250,000,000: And provided further, That all acts and orders of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Treasurer of the United States authorized by this section shall have the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That the Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may accept as security for the additional circulating notes provided for in the preceding section, bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any State of the United States, or any legally authorized bonds issued for municipal purposes by any city or county in the United States which has been in existence as a city or county for a period of fifteen years, and which for a period of ten years previous to such deposit has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it, and which has at such date more than 20,000 inhabitants as established by the last national census, and whose net indebtedness does not exceed 10 per cent of the valuation of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the last preceding valuation of property for the assessment of taxes; or the first-mortgage bonds of any railroad company, not including street-railway bonds, which has paid dividends of not less than 4 per cent per annum regularly and continuously on its entire capital stock for a period of not less than five years previous to the deposit of the bonds. The Treasurer of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may accept, for the purposes of this act, securities herein enumerated in such proportions as he may from time to time determine, and he may at any time require the deposit of additional securities, or require any association to change the character of the securities already on deposit.

SEC. 3. That all bonds deposited to secure circulating notes issued in accordance with the terms of this act shall be transferred to the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the association depositing them, with a memorandum to that effect attached to or written or printed on each bond, and signed by the cashier or some other officer of the association making the deposit. A receipt shall be given to the association by the Comptroller of the Currency, or by a clerk appointed by him for that purpose, stating that such bond is held in trust for the association on whose behalf the transfer is made, and as security for the redemption and payment of any circulating notes that have been or may be delivered to such association. No assignment or transfer of any such bond by the Treasurer shall be deemed valid unless countersigned by the Comptroller of the Currency. The provisions of sections 5163, 5164, 5165, 5166, and 5167 of the Revised Statutes respecting United States bonds deposited to secure circulating notes shall, except as herein modified, be applicable to all bonds deposited under the terms of this act.

SEC. 4. That section 5214 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5214. National banking associations having on deposit bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, including the bonds issued for the construction of the Panama Canal, under the provisions of section 8 of 'An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans,' approved June 28, 1902, to secure its circulating notes, shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States, in the months of January and July, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds; and such associations having on deposit bonds bearing interest at a rate higher than 2 per cent per annum shall pay a tax of one-half per cent each half year upon the average amount of such of its notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. National banking associations having on deposit bonds to secure their circulating notes other than bonds of the United States shall pay a monthly tax of one-half of 1 per cent upon the average amount of such of their notes in circulation as are based upon the deposit of such bonds. Every national banking association having outstanding circulating notes secured by a deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States shall make monthly returns, under oath of its president or cashier, to the Treasurer of the United States, in such form as the Treasurer may prescribe, of the average monthly amount of its notes so secured in circulation. The taxes received on circulating notes secured by bonds other than bonds of the United States shall be paid into the Division of Redemption of the Treasury and credited to the reserve fund held for the redemption of United States and other notes."

SEC. 5. That section 9 of an act approved July 12, 1882, as amended by the act approved March 4, 1907, be further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. That any national banking association desiring to withdraw its circulating notes, secured by deposit of United States bonds in the manner provided in section 4 of the act approved June 20, 1874, is hereby authorized for that purpose to deposit lawful money with the Treasurer of the United States and, with the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency and the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds held as security for its circulating notes in the order of such deposits; and in like manner and effect any such association desiring to withdraw any of its circulating notes, secured by the deposit of bonds other than bonds of the United States, may make such withdrawal at any time by the deposit of lawful money or national bank notes with the Treasurer of the United States, and upon such deposit a proportionate share of the bonds so deposited may be withdrawn: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to United States bonds called for redemption by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to withdrawal of circulating notes in consequence thereof."

SEC. 6. That section 5172 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5172. In order to furnish suitable notes for circulation, the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved, in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting and fraudulent alterations, and shall have printed therefrom, and numbered, such quantity of circulating notes, in blank, of the denominations of $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be required to supply the associations entitled to receive the same. Such notes shall state upon their face that they will be redeemed by the United States in lawful money upon presentation at the Treasury. This pledge shall be certified by the written or engraved signatures of the Treasurer and Register, and by the imprint of the seal of the Treasury. They shall also express upon their face the promise of the association receiving the same to pay on demand, attested by the signature of the president or vice-president and cashier. Upon request of any national banking association the Comptroller of the Currency, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall cause to be prepared circulating notes in blank, registered and countersigned, as provided by law, to an amount equal to 50 per cent of the capital stock of such association; such notes to be deposited in the Treasury or the subtreasury of the United States nearest the place of business of the association making the request, and to be held for such association, subject to the order of the Comptroller of the Currency, for their delivery as provided by law."

SEC. 7. That circulating notes of national banking associations, when presented to the Treasury for redemption, as provided in section 3 of the act approved June 20, 1874, shall be redeemed in lawful money of the United States.

SEC. 8. That national banking associations located outside of reserve or central reserve cities, which are now required by law to keep a reserve equal to 15 per cent of their deposit liabilities, shall hereafter hold at all times at least two-thirds of such reserve in lawful money. The provisions of section 5191 of the Revised Statutes, with reference to the reserves of national banking associations, shall not apply to deposits of public moneys by the United States in designated depositaries.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have asked that this bill be read and printed in the RECORD for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators to its provisions.

I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to say that that committee will proceed to the prompt and careful consideration of this bill and other measures having the same purpose in view; and I have to request Senators who have bills or amendments to present that they present them at as early a day as possible. I also ask that 1,000 additional copies of the bill may be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the Senator from Rhode Island takes his seat, I desire to know if he can give us any information about what action the Committee on Finance will take on the resolution providing for an inquiry into the causes of the present financial stringency?

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee have been, as the Senator from Texas may be aware, reasonably busy with other things, and we have not as yet had an opportunity to take up that question. The Senate at this moment has not received from the Secretary of the Treasury the information asked for by the resolution which the Senate passed before the holiday recess. So far as I am concerned personally, I should be very glad at any time to take up the resolution of the Senator from Texas, and, if the Senator so desires, I will now promise that it shall be taken up at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON. When will that be?

Mr. ALDRICH. Next Tuesday.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply made the inquiry, Mr. President, because the Senator seemed to speak by authority when he said the committee was ready to take up other matters to which he referred but made no specific reference to this resolution.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say that the Senator's resolution is included in the matters to be taken up by the committee at its next meeting.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill having been read twice will be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Senator from Rhode Island asks that 1,000 additional copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Senate. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

GRAZING ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CARTER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2968) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CARTER. Before the reference of the proposed amendment is completed I desire to challenge briefly the attention of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT].

The bill to which this amendment is directed proposes a disposition of public lands by way of general leasing. I submit to the Senator that the Committee on Public Lands is the proper committee of the Senate to take charge of the bill rather than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and to bring the matter forward I move that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2968) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, that committee, I think, having proper jurisdiction of it.

Mr. BURKETT. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry is not now here. I have not any preference one way or the other, except that last year for some reason—I do not know why—the bill was sent to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as the Senator perhaps knows, and, if he does not I will tell him, spent a good many days last year investigating the question; they had a good many hearings, and they thrashed out the subject pretty thoroughly, so to speak.

When the bill was introduced at the present session I think there was some controversy as to which committee it should be referred, and it was finally decided that it should go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, because that committee had already had it under consideration last year and had had hearings on it; that a good deal of time would be saved in not going over the same ground again, and that if it should not come out as a bill it would probably come out as an amendment to the agricultural appropriation bill, on account of the fact that it put this grazing land in the control of the Agricultural Department.

Now, as to the correctness of the Senator's position as to where the bill should go, under the rules, I am not disposed to dispute his judgment, because it is better than mine, and also because I am rather inclined to think that originally the bill perhaps should have gone to the Committee on Public Lands. But, having gone to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry last year, and that committee having taken jurisdiction of it, and having had hearings, and being informed upon the matter, it occurs to me that it would hardly be for the best interests of legislation to have a new committee go over the same ground.

I will say to the Senator, if he will indulge me for a moment, that I am anxious to have the bill come out of some committee at the present session of Congress, so that it may be discussed and passed upon by the Senate, and with the multitude of business the Public Lands Committee always have I fear if it should go there they might not have the time at this session to give it such an investigation and have such hearings as would enable them to make a report or justify them in their opinion in making a report.

This is a matter which has been discussed so much in the open Senate that I should like to have it come out from the committee as soon as possible, so that we might consider it here again.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, my motion was made in the interest of the orderly conduct of business in the Senate. Inasmuch as the bill makes a disposition of public lands it is clear to my mind that under the unbroken line of usage here the Committee on Public Lands is the proper committee of the Senate to dispose of the matter. The subject is so important that I think it is unfortunate to keep it in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with a view to having it presented to the Senate on an appropriation bill. Now and then the necessity of time apparently requires that a great question shall be disposed of in the midst of the line of appropriation items, but I think in the main that class of legislation is unfortunate.

I shall not press the motion at this time, but ask that it may lie over in view of the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I will present it at a later day. Let the amendment lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table.

PERSONNEL OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. HALE. I move to have reprinted, with additional matter, Senate Document No. 115, Sixtieth Congress, first session, being personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps, appointments of boards to make recommendations in regard to the different staff corps of the Navy and Marine Corps, and reports of the same.

The motion was agreed to.

COPYRIGHT ACTS.

On motion of Mr. SMOOT, it was Ordered, That 500 additional copies of the bill (S. 2499) to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyrights, be reprinted for the use of the Committee on Patents.

PRINTING OF STATISTICAL MATTER.

Mr. PENROSE submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 copies of the "Statistical Record of the Progress of the United States, 1800-1907, and Commercial and Financial Statistics of Foreign Countries." (From Statistical Abstract of the United States.)

SURVEY OF CORSICA RIVER, MARYLAND.

Mr. RAYNER submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Corsica River, Maryland, and to submit a plan and estimate for its improvement.

IMMIGRANT STATIONS AT BOSTON AND PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to report to the Senate an estimate of the cost of the construction of new immigrant stations and suitable buildings in connection therewith at the ports of Boston and Philadelphia, and further to report to the Senate as to the advisability of securing new sites for immigrant stations at said ports and an estimate of the cost of such sites as he may deem most suitable.

CONTROL OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CLAY. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report at the earliest convenient day a bill providing that all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein, for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein shall, upon arrival within the borders of the State and before or after delivery to the consignee in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider and report whether or not Congress has the constitutional right to pass a bill prohibiting the transportation of liquors from States, counties, or municipalities where such liquors are legally sold into States, counties, or municipalities where local option or prohibition prevails.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I shall object to its present consideration. I do not think there is any immediate call for the resolution. The membership of the committee has just been filled up, and we have had no opportunity to consider any bills before the committee. I think the committee will take up the measure referred to in regular order, and it seems to me it is entirely out of place to offer a resolution of that kind now, because it is a reflection on the committee and amounts to an assertion that the committee is derelict in its duty. It might be appropriate later in the session, but certainly at this time there is no occasion for such a resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

Mr. CLAY. One minute, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that debate can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLAY. I desire to say just a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Georgia will proceed.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I certainly did not intend to reflect upon the committee, nor do I think the resolution can be construed as a reflection upon the committee. In the first place, several States in this Union have voted absolute prohibition in those States. They have said by law that liquor shall not be manufactured or sold in those States, and when the legislature of a State has enacted such legislation, certainly Congress ought to come to its relief and prevent the shipment of liquors into that State.

In reply to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I desire to say a word. During the last session of Congress there was introduced in the Senate a bill to carry out the legislation outlined in the pending resolution. The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. In fact, an examination of the files of that committee will show that not only one bill, but two bills of the same general character were introduced. I desire to say to the Senator from Minnesota that during the last session of Congress those bills were allowed to sleep in the committee, and were not acted upon. We have now been in session nearly thirty days, and I do not believe this legislation should be allowed to sleep the remainder of the session. Mr. President, we have been notified through the public press that very little legislation, other than the supply bills, is to take place during the present session. Where States have enacted legislation providing for prohibition, the citizens of those States have a right to come to Congress and ask that they be protected from the sale and shipment of whisky by other States.

I merely introduced the resolution to test the sense of the Senate, and I intend to ask a yea-and-nay vote on it at the proper time. I do not doubt that the Judiciary Committee will carry on the will and wishes of the Senate. It was not my intention to reflect in any way upon a single member of that committee, probably the ablest committee of this body. It was simply to test the sense of the Senate and to see whether or not the Senate was in favor of legislation of this character at the earliest possible day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution and it will lie on the table.

SUSPENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. CARTER. I offer a resolution and request its immediate consideration. I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. TELLER) to the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate Senate bill No. 1192, entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section No. 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to mining claims.'"

Mr. TELLER. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection to the present consideration of the resolution is made and it will lie on the table.

COMPILATION OF LAWS RELATING TO INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to have prepared for the use of the Senate a compilation of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, etc., relating to Indian affairs passed and proclaimed since December 1, 1902.

FOREST-RESERVE LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 18, 1907, certain information relative to Conrad Kohrs, as being the only person who has filed in the General Land Office since February 26, 1907, proof of his conveyance to the United States, etc., of title to 440 acres of land, upon which no selection has been made under the act of June 4, 1897, etc., which, on motion of Mr. CARTER, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYEES FOR THE CENSUS OF 1910.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Census and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In the taking of the census of 1910 it will probably be necessary to employ about 4,000 additional persons in the temporary force at Washington. I urge upon the Congress that in the enactment of a law for the taking of the census provision be made that these persons be selected in accordance with the civil-service rules. The Civil Service Commission is amply able through its regular examinations to promptly supply all needed eligibles having the requisite qualifications.

The noncompetitive examinations used in selecting the force at Washington of the last two censuses served only as a cloak to hide the nakedness of the spoils system. Such examinations are useless as checks upon patronage appointments. They prevent the most incompetent from being appointed, but they do not secure the appointment of the most competent, and they afford no check upon political appointments. It is idle to say that such examinations are fair, for the unfairness and favoritism come in in the choosing of the men who shall be allowed to try them. The great majority of the clerical employees of the last two censuses were far below the average of the persons appointed through competitive examinations in like grades. Statistics prepared on this point show that only about 50 per cent of the applicants who were employed in the last census were able to pass the competitive examinations under the civil-service rules, while of all other applicants for the same examinations throughout the country about 67 per cent passed. As appointments are made under the competitive system from those highest in grade, there is even a much wider margin of difference in intelligence and clerical capacity between the two classes than these figures indicate. Much of the value of a census depends upon the faith of the public in it. The taint of the spoils system will not merely hamper and delay the economical and efficient taking of the census, but will impair the belief of the public in its honesty.

These additional employees are certain to seek to be retained in the permanent service at the close of taking the census. If they are selected for the temporary force upon a patronage basis it will be unjust and improper to give them preference over those of superior merit having claims under the civil-service law; and yet the very men who now most strongly object to having these employees put under the civil-service law will then endeavor in every way to secure their transfer to the service protected by that law. This has been the unfailing experience of the past. When a branch of the public service is by law exempted from the operations of the civil-service law, so as to admit persons without regard thereto, the strongest pressure is certain to come later from the very individuals who secured the passage of the exemption law to have those they exempted transferred to the classified service. This effort is being made every day. It is proof positive that all these branches of the public service like the Census should be put without qualification under the civil-service law.

I invite attention to the following letter from the Civil Service Commission and to the quotations contained in it from former Commissioners of the Census:

"DECEMBER 21, 1907.

"The PRESIDENT:

"The bill to provide for the new census (H. R. 7597) provides that the additional employees shall be appointed upon 'such noncompetitive examination as the Director of the Census, in cooperation with the United States Civil Service Commission, may prescribe, the examinations to be held under the direction of said Commission * * *.' Persons having previous experience in census work are excepted from examinations, and the permanent force may be recruited from the temporary force. This proposed legislation is only slightly less vicious than previous census laws. By its noncompetitive feature it permits of the places being apportioned as patronage; and although the persons recommended must be examined, the examinations are not open to public competition. Persons thus appointed for patronage reasons, including persons appointed for the same reasons in previous census work, may be continued in the permanent force. This suspension of the competitive system and the substitution of the patronage system not merely in the temporary force but in the permanent force, which is now subject to competition, opens the door for the removal of persons appointed under the rules to make places for persons appointed by strong political influence. This provision is not merely a backward step, but will inflict a grave blow upon the merit system and discredit competitive examinations. It was only with great difficulty and with your very earnest support that the House provision to allow the temporary employees of the last census to be made eligible to appointment in the classified service without examination was modified.

"Hon. Carrol D. Wright, when Commissioner of the Census, stated that the absence of civil-service rules made an extra cost of $2,000,000, and afterwards said:

"'The above statements more than justify the opinion which I expressed in the report on a plan for a permanent census service, for instead of an extra cost of $2,000,000, to which I guardedly limited myself, it is apparent that under the first comparison there was an extra cost of $6,421,245 and under the second comparison of $3,372,025. the magnitude of the census work, the lack of time for preparation, the temporary nature of the force, etc., may properly, and perhaps sufficiently, account for the extraordinary expense above the $2,000,000 which I have attributed to the absence of civil-service rules.

"'The figures which I have given thoroughly justify the opinion Mr. Porter expressed to me several years ago, that it would have been much better had the Eleventh Census been taken in accordance with civil-service rules, an opinion he has now given to the public in an interesting article in the North American Review for the current month (December, 1897), in which he gives as one of the faults of the system under which censuses have been taken "the placing upon the shoulders of the Superintendent, whose mind should be fully occupied with his experts in planning the work, the responsibility of the appointment of an office force of several thousand clerks."'

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

"JOHN C. BLACK, Commissioner."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1908.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 7, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SLEMP to the Committee on Accounts and also to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GREENE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence for one week, on account of illness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the reference of House resolution 115 was changed from the Committee on the Judiciary to the Committee on Rules.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 66) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 194) to authorize the county of St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across St. Francis River at or near the town of Madison in said county and State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman from Arkansas if this has been reported by a committee?

Mr. MACON. It has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the contract is already let for the construction of the bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MACON, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message and also the resolution distributing it.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. OVERSTREET in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House resolution No. 43.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the resolution has not been read, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House resolution 43.

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much as relates to the appropriations of the public revenue for support of the Government as herein provided, namely, for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications and coast defenses; for pensions; for the District of Columbia, and for all deficiencies be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, to the administration of justice, to the punishment and prevention of crime, and to the organization of courts be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to banks and banking and the currency be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

That so much as relates to commerce and the Isthmian Canal be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

That so much as relates to agriculture, and appropriations therefor, and to forestry be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to the foreign affairs, the consular and diplomatic service, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much as relates to the military establishment, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That so much as relates to the naval establishment and to the construction of additional vessels for the Navy, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

That so much as relates to the post-office and post-roads and to the carrying of the foreign mails, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

That so much as relates to the public domain be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

That so much as relates to the relations of the United States to the Indian tribes, and appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

That so much as relates to the Territories, Alaska, and the Hawaiian Islands be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

That so much as relates to the islands which came to the United States through the treaty of 1899 with Spain (except so much as relates to the revenue and the appropriations) be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

That so much as relates to the mining interests be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

That so much as relates to the levees of the Mississippi River be referred to the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River.

That so much as relates to education be referred to the Committee on Education.

That so much as relates to labor be referred to the Committee on Labor.

That so much as relates to the affairs of the District of Columbia (excepting appropriations) be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

That so much as relates to reform in the civil service be referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

That so much as relates to the election of the President, Vice-President, or Representatives in Congress be referred to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

That so much as relates to the irrigation of arid lands be referred to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

That so much as relates to statuary and pictures be referred to the Joint Committee on the Library.

That so much as relates to the census be referred to the Committee on the Census.

That so much as relates to the industrial arts and expositions other than revenue and appropriations be referred to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution for the distribution of the various subjects and contents in the President's message to the appropriate committees of the House under the rule. Having said that much, I have said all that there is to say in regard to it. It is unanimously reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means. If any gentleman desires to ask any questions in regard to it, I will be glad to answer, if I can.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some understanding about the speech making. That is a plain way of putting it.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have not been asked by any gentleman on this side of the House for any time. I propose to reserve the balance of my own time if there are no questions to be asked, and I will then yield to any gentleman on the other side who desires to take the floor in his own right.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to control half of the time.

Mr. SHERMAN. But no agreement of that kind has been made as yet.

Mr. PAYNE. I suggest that the gentleman take the floor for an hour in his own right and that we arrange the matter afterwards.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. But I do not want to make any remarks myself. There are several gentleman over here, however, who are not unwilling to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent I shall not object to it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to control half the time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there has been no time fixed for debate, and there could not be any arrangement to control half the time. The gentleman can have an hour in his own right. Half the time would mean all the rest of the session.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to say to the gentleman from Missouri that the time is without limit, and I think there will be no difficulty in getting all the time that he wants on that side of the House—of course, subject to the coming in of other business perhaps more important even than debate on this question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I desire to yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas, Mr. SHEPPARD.

Mr. PAYNE. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York reserves the balance of his time, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri, who yields thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. My inquiry is this: Can we agree on time in the committee, or do we have to go back into the House to make that agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the committee may fix the limits of the debate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me by unanimous consent, then, that somebody on this side ought to control half of the time and somebody on the other side control the other half of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri that that arrangement is desirable where there is pressure for time, but where there seems to be abundance of time it is not necessary. However, the committee has the power by unanimous consent to fix the time of debate. The gentleman from Missouri will understand further that under the existing conditions the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] having been first recognized and being entitled to an hour, and reserving the remainder of his time, the Chair has now recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who is entitled to an hour.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes of that hour to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas for thirty minutes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I rise, Mr. Chairman, without partisan feeling or purpose briefly to submit the reasons which prompted me to introduce at the opening of the present session a bill providing that the words, "In God We Trust," should be retained upon the coins of the United States. On recent issues of gold coins designed by the late Augustus St. Gaudens this striking sentence, so expressive of American reverence and faith, has been omitted by order of President Roosevelt. It may be interesting to refer here to the circumstances under which this motto was first inscribed upon our coinage. In November, 1861, when the foundations of the Republic were shaking, a Pennsylvania minister warned the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Salmon P. Chase, that if the nation should perish no evidence of the religious faith of its inhabitants would be preserved upon its coins. Impressed by the minister's appeal, the Secretary of the Treasury, affirming that no nation could be strong except in the strength of God or safe except in His defense, and that the trust of the American people in God should be declared on the national coin, requested the Director of the Mint to prepare a device "with a motto expressing in the fewest and tersest words possible this national recognition." It was discovered that legislation would be necessary, as the act of January, 1837, prescribed the mottoes and devices for our coins. In April, 1864, in March, 1865, and in February, 1873, Congress enacted laws providing in substance that the words, "In God we trust," might be inscribed upon such coins as would admit of such motto.

Mr. Chairman, Congress ought not to permit this legend to be stricken from the coinage. The American people are fundamentally a religious people. They are distinguished by a devotion to religious and civil freedom. Perhaps every form of religious thought is represented among us and yet we are one in the recognition of a supreme and all-wise God. The opportunity to worship the omnipotent Father according to the conscience of the individual is the basis of American history, the corner-stone of the American Commonwealth. There is an essential relation between God and freedom. Liberty as a permanent prerogative of the people was for all practical purposes an impossible conception before Abraham's proclamation of the one all-seeing God. After this proclamation men who had worshipped kings and idols came soon to realize that the God of the spirit was the only rightful sovereign. They came soon to understand that with the same spiritual Father men were brothers both here and hereafter. It followed immediately that men were spiritual and political equals, and liberty, equality, fraternity, dawned upon the human race. Thus God is the source of liberty and religious freedom the basis of political independence. Voltaire, the scoffer, the satirist, but above all the analyst profound, expressed this truth with evident application to the American Republic when raising his withered hands above the grandson of Benjamin Franklin who had besought for the youth the aged philosopher's benediction, he whispered, "God and Liberty." It was the idea of the one God and the resultant conception of human brotherhood that made the Hebrew nation the world's first self-governing commonwealth and enabled it to embody the highest religious and civic ideals six centuries before Greece knew an alphabet and more than a thousand years before the Latins founded Rome.

These principles were the basis of the Mosaic code, a code which is to-day the framework of civilization and government, a code which enters elementally into the civil and criminal codes of all modern states, a code which taught the elevation of woman, the love of home, the sanctity of property and life, the observance of the Sabbath, charity, fraternity, representative government, systematic education, contempt for luxury and extravagance, equal rights and rigid justice. These principles have made the Hebrew commonwealth a model and a light in the reformations, awakenings, and revolutions of the world. In the American Revolution arguments in behalf of independence and against all despotism were liberally drawn from Judaic literature and teaching. Throughout the colonies the Hebrew nation was cited as the ideal republic. On the day the Continental Congress declared our independence Franklin, Adams, and Jefferson were appointed to prepare a seal for the United States and for a device they selected a representation of Moses watching the Red Sea as it enveloped Pharaoh, adding beneath the picture the words, "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." It is of more than human import that the Hebrew commonwealth, embodying the ideas of God and liberty, was the chief example of the American patriots and that the United States, representing in the spirit underlying its institutions the Hebrew nation more closely than does any other country, was the first government since the final destruction of Jerusalem, seventeen hundred years before, under which the Hebrew people were admitted to unrestricted and coequal citizenship.

The beginnings of the United States were essentially religious, and a divine purpose may be seen in the events which made possible our country and its institutions. Surely there was omnipotent design in the fact that the invention of printing, the discovery of America, and the European Reformation took place within the same century. The printing press brought the Bible to the people, and they rose from the serfdom of ages to stand before God as untrammeled children; before each other as brothers and as equals. With the Reformation began the movement to free the soul, the brain, the arm of man—a movement which culminated on this hemisphere in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. Despotism was assailed, and wars, commotions, persecutions raged through Europe. That this movement might reach fruition in a new world undisturbed by the errors and oppressions of the old, God pointed the frail caravels of Columbus to these virgin shores. It was of more significance than even Columbus dreamed that on landing at Salvador his first act was to kneel upon the soil and dedicate the infant continent to the King of Kings. Thus under the especial favor of Providence America began. I now propose to show that the finger of God may be traced in every crisis of American history and that the dominant note of American character has been an unfaltering trust in the wisdom and the justice of Omnipotence. [Applause.]

It is worthy of remark that every effort to exploit this country for sordid ends failed utterly; the adventurers in search of gold and notoriety came to grief. On the contrary, the valiant spirits who braved the trackless tides, the storms, the savages, the snows to establish in America a government of the free, who fled religious and political oppression to erect upon these shores the altars of religious and political liberty—the Puritan, the Huguenot, the Catholic, the Quaker, the Walloon, the Waldensian, the Covenanter, the Lutheran, the Cavalier, the Dissenter, the Highlander, the Moravian, the Jew; in fact, the hosts of earth's exiled and earth's wronged—flourished here under difficulties so tremendous, such pestilences, famines, massacres, and dissensions, that their preservation and advancement can be attributed to no other source than the God whose worship they came to maintain in its original purity, whose freedom they were to transmit to posterity and eternity. [Applause.] Before commencing each day's work the colonists at Jamestown assembled in the little church to invoke the blessings of Jehovah. "Doubt not," they wrote their friends at home, "God will raise our state and build His church in this excellent clime." When in 1619 the house of burgesses, the first legislative body in America, was established in this colony one of its first resolutions was a recognition of God. When the little congregation of John Robinson in the north of England was driven by the minions and measures of intolerance to Holland to become immortal pilgrims in the cause of liberty and the truth they were animated by a deathless trust in God.

Before landing on Massachusetts soil, after leaving Holland, they paused to compose upon the Mayflower our first written Constitution, and they began that remarkable document in the name of God. The first sentence summarizes the doctrines of God and freedom on which American institutions rest. Throughout colonial times the fires of faith and brotherhood were kept ablaze by Higginson, Hooker, Eliot, Mayhew, Williams, Davenport, Fox, Penn, Barclay, Keith, Whitfield, the Wesleys, Edwards, and other champions of an unshackled gospel, an unshackled manhood. They originated the religious revivals which have become so splendid a feature of American life. The first work of the first printing press in America, established in 1639, was a metrical version of the Psalms.

The life of Washington, the buttress of the Republic in its most perilous emergencies, shows instance after instance of divine intervention. One of the most notable of these was his preservation during the slaughter of Braddock's troops on the Monongahela in the French and Indian war. So marvelous was his escape that he at once accredited it to the Almighty. Writing his brother, Augustine, he said: "By the all-powerful dispensation of Providence, I have been protected beyond all human probability or expectation; for I had four bullets through my coat, two horses shot under me, yet escaped unhurt, though death was leveling my companions on every side around me." Indeed, his survival excited universal comment. One of the foremost clergymen of the time, Rev. Samuel Davies, voiced the general opinion when he referred to Washington, in a sermon shortly after Braddock's defeat, as "that heroic youth, Colonel Washington, whom I can not but hope Providence has hitherto preserved in so signal a manner for some important service to his country." [Applause.]

The first Continental Congress, with the assembling of which the Revolution morally began, was opened with prayer. On the second day the distinguished body met under the disturbing influence of a rumored bombardment of Boston. Indignation was on every brow, sympathy in every heart. The thirty-fifth Psalm, wherein David recites his wrongs and cries out for the shield and buckler of the Lord, was read by the Chaplain with such fervor and such effect that he broke into a thrilling prayer for the colonists and that John Adams afterwards expressed the belief that Heaven had ordained this passage to be read that morning. When the Chaplain concluded there was the silence of death. Then rose Patrick Henry, and under the impulse of that tremendous moment exclaimed in part: "The distinctions between Virginians, Pennsylvanians, New Yorkers, and New Englanders are no more. I am not a Virginian, but an American." [Applause.] With that sentence, inspired by more than human surroundings, the birth of American citizenship was complete, the germ of the American Republic was in flower. During the following year Henry expressed a similar sentiment when in his memorable address before the Virginia Revolutionary convention he said that there was a just God who would raise up friends to fight the battles of the colonists and welcomed liberty or death.

Ethan Allen crowded American history into a single sentence when he demanded the surrender of Ticonderoga in the name of the Great Jehovah and the Continental Congress. On Cambridge Common, the day before Bunker Hill, we see the president of Harvard praying among our troops. The colonists began the American revolution with prayer, and before the war was over the British, too, had learned to pray. [Applause.] On assuming command of the Continental Armies, Washington expressed the most unqualified confidence in the Deity. So desperate was the situation at the onset of a struggle between a fledgling nation and one of the foremost powers of the earth, such the destitution, lack of discipline, lack of numbers among the colonials, that Washington wrote a friend in confidence: "We are now left with a good deal less than half-raised regiments and about 5,000 militia. * * * If I shall be able to rise superior to these and many other difficulties which might be enumerated, I shall most religiously believe that the finger of Providence is in it to blind the eyes of our enemies." Can we doubt the partiality of the Creator when we recall the unspeakable suffering, the disparity of strength, the bitter winters, the ragged uniforms, the bloody prints of shoeless feet, the poverty of state and individual, the inherent weakness of government, the treacheries and intrigues through which the patriot cause ascended to consummate victory?

Can we question the especial aid of the Ruler of all Worlds when we see the fog refuse to rise that August morning in 1776 until our army had retreated from almost certain annihilation on Long Island, and then some five years later observe the dawning daylight drive the escaping Cornwallis back to Yorktown and surrender? Can we deny the interposition of Divinity when in the gloomiest hours of the conflict we see the tattered Continentals retreat barefooted over frozen roads, crossing, when almost overtaken, the Catawba and the Yadkin, whose waters successively rose to delay their pursuers? Is it strange that after the decisive victory of Yorktown the Continental Congress immediately proceeded to a church and, after expressing public thanks to God, proclaimed a day of national thanksgiving, in which the entire country joined most fervently? Is it strange that Washington, on surrendering his commission, deemed it an imperative duty to commend the nation to the continued protection of Omniscience?

As the first act of Columbus on American soil was a recognition of Providence, it was remarkably fitting that nearly three centuries later the first act of the First Congress under the present system, after hearing the inaugural address of Washington, which glowed with expressions of gratitude to Heaven, was to assemble in a church and there unite in supplication to the Lord of all. Before the adjournment of that initial session Congress requested the President to recommend a "day of public thanksgiving and prayer, in acknowledgment of the many signal favors of Almighty God, and especially His affording the people an opportunity peaceably to establish a constitutional government for their safety and happiness." De Tocqueville, the great French historian and philosopher, who wrote the most accurate and remarkable analysis of American character yet given to mankind, observed after visiting the United States in the first half of the last century: "It never must be forgotten that religion gave birth to Anglo-American society." It is hardly possible to dissociate the miraculous growth of the American Republic in population, in territory, in material and spiritual strength, in world influence, and importance from the cooperation of an agency more than mortal.

Especially is this true when we consider the questions of internal policy which, after threatening the existence of the country for seventy years, were not permanently settled until the altars of a reunited country had been christened in the blood of brothers.

When in the exciting hours of the Clay compromise of 1850 the strife of contending factions was angriest, Benton, his turbulence for once subdued, said, concerning the solution of the pending problem: "It seems to be above human reason. But there is a wisdom above human, and to that we must look." On leaving his home at Springfield in February, 1861, for the assumption of the Presidency, when the signs of the storm through which he was to guide the imperiled nation were everywhere apparent, Lincoln voiced the traditional American trust in God when he said to the neighbors who had come to say farewell:

My friends, no one not in my position can appreciate the sadness I feel at this parting. A duty devolves upon me which is perhaps greater than that which has devolved upon any other man since the days of Washington. He never would have succeeded except for the aid of Divine Providence upon which at all times he relied. I feel that I can not succeed without the same divine aid which sustained him. I hope you, my friends, will all pray that I may receive the same divine assistance with which success is certain.

Both sides in the appalling conflict which ensued, leaders and followers alike, Lincoln, Davis, Grant, Lee, McClellan, Jackson, and other mighty figures, exhibited a heroism in march and charge, in camp and Cabinet, a devotion to truth as each conceived it, that could proceed only from the most unlimited faith in the Infinite Preserver. [Applause.]

Both sides achieved eternal victories, the one having preserved a nation, the other having defied annihilation and challenged death for its conception of the right. [Applause.] When the assassination of Lincoln in April, 1865, had filled the world with gloom and dread and disturbances more violent than those of war seemed imminent, we hear the voice of Garfield as he lifted the American flag above the rioters in New York, "God reigns and the Government at Washington still lives." Immediately the country caught the spirit of this matchless appeal and another crisis had been mastered. It was about this time, at the culmination of the period which established the unity and permanency of the Republic that Congress, as if by inspiration, ordered the sentence "In God we trust," a sentence summarizing the history and reflecting the character of the American people, to be inscribed upon the nation's coinage. For more than forty years it has there remained to remind us of our origin and the world of our faith. Who can doubt that its educational and ethical value has been immense? Who will not regret its displacement on certain coins to make way for the Gaudens design, a design which shows on one side a woman in savage head-dress, on the other a Roman eagle in predatory flight—the one side a degradation of woman, the other a eulogy of war? [Applause.]

It is particularly appropriate that the inscription "In God we trust" should appear upon our national moneys. The coinage of a country is the most concrete and universal evidence of its sovereignty. Is it not fitting that this most elemental expression of government should contain a recognition of the power to which the Government owes its foundation, its growth, its glory? Again, the coinage is, as a rule, the first and most general token of government with which American children and foreigners seeking our citizenship become familiar. It enters fundamentally into the people's lives and thoughts and hopes. It is the vitalizing element in commerce, society, and government. Bearing the words "In God we trust," it would suggest to every child and every citizen the genius of American institutions; it would lead every foreigner to study American ideals in the light of a proper philosophy. [Applause.] It is a poor time to remove this motto when economic disaster shrouds the land, when the successful and the rich of yesterday are the suicides and paupers of to-day. For the reasons enumerated, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the beautiful and stately sentence "In God we trust," so symbolic of American history, American aspiration, American faith, should be permanently inscribed upon the coinage of the United States. [Applause.] And permit me, sir, to express the firm belief that the eye of God is watching the American fleet as it speeds to-day through distant seas beneath strange suns and stranger stars, and that if we are destined, contrary to our desires and prayers, to meet in combat the foremost heathen power of the globe, the God of Washington, of Lincoln, and of Lee will again crown the American arms with victory. [Great applause.]

LET CONGRESS RESTORE IT.

In presenting in this issue the opinions of a large number of our readers regarding the removal of the time-honored motto, "In God we trust," from the national coinage, the Christian Herald makes no apology for devoting considerable space to the topic which is still uppermost in the minds and hearts of many Americans. These letters represent only a portion of the very large number actually received; but they are sufficient to show beyond all cavil the trend of public opinion, which is distinctly averse to the removal of the motto.

It is not necessary here to review the many reasons set forth by the writers of these letters in favor of restoration. Their conclusions are fairly representative of American public opinion as a whole, and these conclusions must be apparent to every fair-minded person.

"A shock to the nation," "a blow at Christian sentiment," "the removal of an honored landmark," "a degenerate step backward," "a national blunder," "a slap in the face of our heavenly Father"—such are some of the expressions which show how deeply our people have been stirred by the effacement of the motto. They feel that a great wrong has been committed in sacrilegiously removing the words which imply national recognition of God's protecting care over our land and people and that dishonor has been done to the memories of those noble men who, in a time of severe national stress and trial, placed the motto on our coinage.

We note that a measure has already been introduced in Congress for the restoration of the motto. Every loyal American citizen will desire its passage. Let us see to it that we do not falsify history by impiously effacing from our coinage the recognition due to Him to whom we owe all our national greatness, happiness, and prosperity.

[Extract from Christian Herald, December, 25, 1907.]

A GREAT NATIONAL PROTEST.

Nothing that has happened in years has touched the American heart more deeply and painfully than the removal of the time-honored motto from the national coinage. Many hundreds of letters on the subject have been received by the Christian Herald, and they are still coming, in apparently undiminished volume. The overwhelming majority demand the restoration of the motto. These letters, which come from every State and are a sure index of the general feeling throughout the nation, if published in full, would fill almost an entire issue of the Christian Herald. We give a number of them in these two pages:

SHOW THE WORLD WHERE WE STAND.

Every effort should be made to have the motto restored to our coins. It has always impressed me as being a beautiful and yet positive way of showing the world just where and how we stand in our relation to Him "whose we are and whom we serve."

As this is God's beloved country, the words should certainly be retained along with the American eagle.

THE NATION SHOULD TRUST IN GOD.

I am sorry that the motto "In God we trust," has been left off of our coins. It inspired us to know that we, as a nation, trusted in God, and were not ashamed to admit it. May we continue to trust in God as a little child would trust its mother. "Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah there is everlasting strength." Isaiah, 26:4.

REMOVING THE SOLID FOUNDATION.

It caused us sorrow when we observed on the new coins the absence of the revered and time-honored motto. To eliminate this would seem like removing the solid foundation upon which America stands and has stood for years. It would seem like ignoring the sacrifices made by the Pilgrim Fathers, the victories of the American Revolution and the triumph of faith in God manifested by Lincoln when, after prayer, with the stroke of his pen, 3,000,000 slaves were set free.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

LIKE THE ATHEISM OF FRANCE IN 1790.

The dropping from our coins of the motto "In God we trust" appeals to every Christian who has a spark of patriotism left in his heart. No Christian whose forefathers had a hand in helping to found this God-given country, and who, in fleeing from home and native land to avoid persecution, left all that they held dear to find a home where they could worship God in peace and security, can possibly object to the stamping of that dear name and motto for which their fathers suffered so much. I never dreamed that President Roosevelt would sanction such a want of reverence. It seems too much like the first step toward ruin, and not far removed from the act of France in the revolution of 1790, when they decreed that God did not exist.

WHICH SIDE WANTS THE MOTTO?

There are only two great leaders in this world, Christ and the devil. They are the very opposite in almost everything. Which of these desires the motto on our coins to remain, and which one wants it erased? I think the party of Christ wants it to remain, while the other party would like to see it forever erased from every coin and the image and knowledge of Jesus erased from every heart.

REV. W. T. LONE.

ARE WE FORGETTING GOD?

I am decidedly in favor of replacing the motto "In God we trust" on our national coin. It seems to me that there is a general tendency to go away from God in nearly everything now.

EDMUNDS, N. DAK.

CLING TO THE MOTTO.

If we, as a Christian nation, allow the removal of our motto, "In God we trust," from our coins on account of ridicule and irreverence, we disown God and give permission also to remove the date for the same cause. Can our nation afford to do this?

Cling to our motto, "In God we trust,"
This for our nation surely is just.
God is our leader, He is our Guide,
Do not insult and set Him aside.

PUT BACK THE MOTTO.

Shall we not have the motto still,
These words, "In God we trust,"
Upon our gold and silver coins?
Yes, keep it there we must.

Our God has fought our battles well,
Kept us through good and ill;
Has given us peace and plenty, too;
Can we not trust Him still?

Are we a Christian nation yet,
And fear the truth to own?
"In God we trust," oh, let that fact
In every land be known.

Put back the motto on our coin,
And let us keep it there;
And as a nation, by our deeds,
Its truthfulness declare.

WALTON, N. H.

WE NEED GOD'S HELP ALWAYS.

I am distressed that our good President should remove our ancient landmark. We are a Christian nation, but there is much to alarm us. Violence and suicides reign. In a single issue of the Ledger six suicides were reported. There is so much lawlessness and ungodliness that we need all the help and the recognition of our God to sustain us in our perils.

MRS. E. B. STARK.

GERMANTOWN, PA.

A DANGEROUS STEP.

We should keep the sacred motto, "In God we trust," on all our national coinage, because it is a sermon in itself and shows to the world that we as a nation believe in one God and recognize Him in our very commercial life. I hope and trust the inscription will be replaced. Many things that are dangerous we are doing as a people, among them ruling the Holy Bible out of our public schools in so many cities.

DEPRECATED BY ALL GOOD MEN.

I join with all good men in deprecating this sad departure from the God-honoring ways of the wise men of other days. The word still remains true, "Them that honor Me I will honor, and they that despise Me shall be lightly esteemed." I Sam., 2:30.

RESTORE THE WORDS.

"In God we trust." Most woeful day
When ceases thus our land to pray.
Restore the words you took away
From off our coins—brook no delay.
No matter what the scoffers say,
"In God we trust"—no better way.

Then lift us high, don't drag us down,
And with the stars let's wear the crown.
"In God we trust"—let's pass it on
Each time we trade with God's own coin.
Let's raise the standard to the throne,
On coin, in life, the Lord to own.

ROANOKE, VA.

A SAD MISTAKE.

I think it is a sad mistake to remove the motto. With the widespread desecration of the Sabbath, the motto gone from our coins, the name of Jesus taken from the song books at Christmas, where are we drifting? When I heard that the words "In God we trust," were left off the new coins, it seemed as though a star had fallen from the flag.

Shall we now cease to trust Him? Are we ashamed? It is written: "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord."

MARY E. BRYAN.

MILLINGTON, MD.

WILL THE BIBLE BE DROPPED NEXT?

We are much opposed to the dropping of the motto "In God we trust." Man must and ever will repose his trust in something; it may be wealth, influence, an idol, himself. No one of these can be trusted. "Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." The dropping of the motto must have its root very near the borders of atheism; the next step may be the dropping of the Bible, as in the time of the French revolution.

E. M. SAPP.

SHINNSTON, W. VA.

DO WE TRUST IN GOD ANY MORE?

Some one said to me the other day, "I guess they are going to leave it off because we don't trust in God any more." If that is not "making light of the matter" and leaving us in bad shape for the future, if many people reason that way, I am much mistaken. I am one of those who still "Trust in God," whether the motto be on or off of our coins. I believe, too, for the welfare of coming generations, we can not keep the solemn words too conspicuously in the sight of our people.

C. S.

CANTON, OHIO.

A "GREAT BLUNDER."

The inscription was a natural outcome of our faith, and its removal is a probably undesigned slap in the face to the predicted programme of the gospel. If the allegation of "bad taste" be right, the prophet was surely wrong when he declared that the sacred inscription on the high priest's miter. "Holiness unto the Lord," should eventually find place on the "bells of the horses." God commanded the ancients to write the sacred verities of their faith upon the posts of their houses, and afterwards, by the mouth of Isaiah, denounced those who showed their divided allegiance in setting up their memorial "behind the doors," where they could not be seen. A nation's faith needs no protection from the jests of a few fools. Only a great man could be capable of so great a blunder.

LET THE MOTTO STAND.

The motto is an expression of honor, gratitude, and love from the American nation to the God who made them free. The God of love wants public expression from His people, that the world may see and profit by it, and He honors any opportunity taken to acknowledge Him.

Can this nation afford to cast aside so far-reaching an opportunity as is given by the motto on the coins, to honor the God who has so abundantly blessed them? Let the beautiful words stand forth on gold and silver, and keep ever before our eyes the thought of Him who gave us liberty.

A MENACE TO OUR INSTITUTIONS.

The proposition to remove the motto is not American, and it should be retained as a landmark of our beloved country. The war upon the Bible, the recent action of the school board in New York to exclude the name of Christ from the books of song, and the removal of our national motto from our coins, all should be regarded as a menace to our Government and its institutions.

BLACKINTON, MASS.

IT EXPRESSES THE NATION'S FAITH.

It is the nonsectarian motto not of the few, but of the many, and being such should not have been removed from the coinage without popular approval. A motto expressive of patriotism has no more right upon our coins than one expressive of the faith without which a nation would presently find itself in the dust. Old Glory is not too good for everyday use; neither is the grand old motto which has so long publicly expressed the highest faith of the great American people.

Replace the motto on all gold and silver coins by the highest authority of this nation—an act of Congress. I manifested my love of country by leaving my wife and three sons and serving three years in the Eleventh Kansas Volunteers. SHOULD BE INSTANTLY REPLACED.

As an American citizen I believe the motto "In God we trust" should be instantly restored to its time-honored place on our national coins. DON'T HAUL DOWN THE BANNER.

The removal of the motto shows an evidence of weakness and a catering to the adversary on the part of the authorities in power. So long as we claim to be a Christian nation, Christian mottoes should dominate its citizens. When a professedly Christian nation obliterates its Christian motto it permits or licenses the banner of truth to be hauled down and trampled under the feet of men.

IS IT BLASPHEMY?

KEEP THE BANNER FLYING.

It is true this sublime sentiment has often been made the subject of blasphemous insult, but so has our flag. We do not ignore Christ because He has been scourged and spit upon. We do not haul down the Stars and Stripes because they have at times been trampled under brutal feet. Let us nail our colors to the masthead and go on to either defeat or victory, with our banners flying and with our trust in the living God emblazoned upon our coinage!

A PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR'S PROTEST.

I consider this a time to register my protest as it pertains to the unexpected action taken by our President. It only proves the saying correct which declares "All great men are not always wise." We, as citizens of the Republic who love that sacred sentence, ought not to be robbed of our right use of it because of the other fellow's abuse of it. We would not like to see this landmark removed and none put in its place.

A STRONG PROTEST URGED.

From friends who have expressed their opinions concerning the removal of the motto, I have not heard a dissenting voice. A BLOW AT CHRISTIAN SENTIMENT.

The motto has adorned our coin for many years; and if left off now, the effect will certainly not aid or increase Christian sentiment, but rather the reverse. We should trust God in all things. Why, then, is the motto out of place on our coins when we claim to be a Christian nation?

W. C. OLIVER.

OAK RIDGE, N. J.

A TRUE AMERICAN'S PROTEST.

I am now in the eighty-first year of my age. My forefathers (on my father's side) were among the Pilgrims of Plymouth, and my grandfather was a soldier of the Revolution. My ancestors, paternal and maternal, took part in the early affairs of this God-blessed country.

"In God we trust" is the basic expression of our faith and trust as a free and united people. David, "the sweet singer of Israel," called upon his people to trust in God and sing his praise for their deliverance from bondage. Our Key-written song, "The Star-Spangled Banner," gives the theme for our praise and the source of our deliverance. Our silver and gold, with the motto indelibly stamped thereon, circulate, and our flag floats, in and over "the isles of the sea." From these the Cubans and Filipinos may learn our mission and profit by our example. "The isles shall wait for his law." Isa., 42: 4.

Shall we not profit by the history of nations in the past and learn wisdom? Read I Sam., 8: 7.

When the order was given to strike "In God we trust" from our coin, it was the worst strike ever ordered in the history of our country. Congress should at once order a halt and a restoration of the motto.

APPENDIX B.

[Extract from Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel, December 19, 1907.]

COINAGE MOTTO IS AUTHORIZED.—CONGRESS ENACTED A LAW PROVIDING FOR "IN GOD WE TRUST."—SALMON CHASE ITS AUTHOR.—LINCOLN'S SECRETARY OF TREASURY ACTED UPON CLERGYMAN'S SUGGESTION.

The statement in President Roosevelt's letter to the effect that there had been no warrant in law for placing the motto "In God we trust" upon United States coins naturally suggests the question, How and by what authority did the motto get there? [says the New York Evening Post].

That question is fully answered by a report of the Director of the United States Mint, reprinted in 1897 in the Bankers' Magazine, of this city.

A first suggestion of such recognition of the Deity came, in 1861, from a Pennsylvania clergyman, who feared that antiquarians of the future might deduce that the United States had been a pagan country because of the absence of any evidence to the contrary on its coins.

But the form of the recognition as it was finally adopted and stamped upon the gold and silver coins was determined by Salmon P. Chase, Secretary of the Treasury in President Lincoln's Cabinet. There was no specific act of Congress directing that the words "In God we trust" be put upon the coins, but, although President Roosevelt found no "warrant in law" for the words, it is a matter of record that the Secretary of the Treasury ordered the Director of the Mint to stamp them on the money, and in 1864 Congress authorized such devices on the coins as should be fixed by the Director, with the approval of the Secretary.

SUGGESTED BY A CLERGYMAN.

Further legislative authority for the motto was given by the coinage bills passed by Congress in 1865 and 1873.

The report of the Director of the Mint is as follows:

"From the records of the Department it appears that the first suggestion of the recognition of the Deity on the coins of the United States was contained in a letter addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. S. P. Chase, by the Rev. M. R. Watkinson, minister of the gospel, Ridleyville, Pa., under date of November 13, 1861, which was as follows:

"'RIDLEYVILLE, PA., November 13, 1861.

"'DEAR SIR: You are about to submit your annual report to Congress respecting the affairs of the national finances.

"'One fact touching our currency has hitherto been seriously overlooked. I mean the recognition of the Almighty God in some form on our coins.

"'You are probably a Christian. What if our Republic were now shattered beyond reconstruction? Would not the antiquarians of succeeding centuries rightly reason from our past that we were a heathen nation? What I propose is that, instead of the Goddess of Liberty, we shall have next inside the thirteen stars a ring inscribed with the words 'perpetual union;' within this ring the all-seeing eye, crowned with a halo; beneath this eye the American flag, bearing in its field stars equal to the number of States united; in the folds of the bars the words 'God, liberty, law.'

"'This would make a beautiful coin, to which no possible citizen could object. This would relieve us from the ignominy of heathenism. This would place us openly under the divine protection we have personally claimed. From my heart I have felt our national shame in disowning God as not the least of our present national disasters.

"'To you, first, I address a subject that must be agitated.

"'M. R. WATKINSON,

"'Minister of the Gospel.

"'Hon. S. P. CHASE, Secretary of the Treasury.'

AUTHORIZED BY S. P. CHASE.

"Under the date of November 20, 1861, the Secretary of the Treasury addressed the following letter to the Director of the Mint:

"'TREASURY DEPARTMENT, November 20, 1861.

"'DEAR SIR: No nation can be strong except in the strength of God or safe except in His defense. The trust of our people in God should be declared on our national coin.

"'You will cause a device to be prepared without unnecessary delay with a motto expressing in the fewest and tersest words possible this national recognition.

"'Yours, truly, S. P. CHASE.

"'JAMES POLLOCK, Esq.,

"'Director of the Mint, Philadelphia, Pa.'

"It was found that the act of January 18, 1837, prescribed the mottoes and devices that should be placed upon the coins of the United States, so that nothing could be done without legislation.

"In December, 1863, the Director of the Mint submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury for approval designs for 1, 2, and 3 cent pieces, on which it was proposed that one of the following mottoes should appear: 'Our country;' 'Our God;' 'God, our trust.'

LEGISLATION BY CONGRESS.

"The Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter addressed to the Director of the Mint, under the date of December 9, 1863, uses the following language:

"'I approve your mottoes, only suggesting that on that with the Washington obverse the motto should begin with the word "Our," so as to read: "Our God and our country," and on that with the shield it should be changed so as to read: "In God we trust."

"An act was passed April 22, 1864, changing the composition of the 1-cent piece and authorizing the coinage of the 2-cent piece, the devices of which were to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and it is upon the 2-cent bronze piece that the motto 'In God we trust' first appears.

"The act of March 3, 1865, provided that in addition to the legend and device on the gold and silver coins of the United States it should be lawful for the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to place the motto 'In God we trust' on such coins as shall admit of the inscription thereon. Under this act the motto was placed upon the double eagle, eagle, and half eagle, and also upon the dollar, half, and quarter dollars in the latter part of 1865.

"The coinage act of February 12, 1873, provided that the Secretary of the Treasury may cause the motto 'In God we trust' to be inscribed on such coins as shall admit of such motto.

"This is a brief history of the motto 'In God we trust,' as shown by the records of the Department."

CINCINNATI, OHIO, November 14.

Deploring the failure to put the motto "In God we trust" on United States coins, the Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, at its final session to-day, adopted a resolution urging Congress to restore the inscription on all coins.

Mr. PAYNE. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I have listened, as I am sure all the members of the committee have listened, not only with great pleasure but with profit, to the eloquent remarks of the scholarly gentleman from Texas, and I think we will all concede that in every fit and appropriate way the American people should show to the world that we are a God-fearing people. No nation has ever had greater cause to thank Providence for the career which it has had in its national life. But it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, there is an appropriate time and an appropriate manner to show that trust in an overruling Providence.

I presume that the appropriateness of time and place and manner of rendering unto God the things that are God's was never better shown than in that remarkable parable in which a coin was used as an illustration with such convincing effect. The way in which to show, Mr. Chairman, our trust in God is in our lives as individuals and in our influence as a nation. There are, however, occasions where the expression of our faith would be untimely and therefore irreverent. If the removal of this legend indicates that we have lost our faith as a people or that the President in approving its removal was lacking in proper reverence and regard for national ideals, then the criticisms of the gentleman from Texas would perhaps be justifiable. But do we strengthen our faith or reverently exhibit it by blazoning it upon our coinage?

Following along the line of argument of the gentleman from Texas, it would be as appropriate to place this motto upon all the commissions and other documents that are issued by the United States. Let me close by reading the words of that parable which, as I have said, show the proper time and place and manner of displaying our faith in Omnipotence and the propriety of discriminating between things worldly and things divine. I read from the twenty-second chapter of the Gospel according to St. Matthew, beginning at the fifteenth verse:

15. Then went the Pharisees, and took counsel how they might entangle Him in His talk.

16. And they sent out unto Him their disciples with the Herodians, saying, Master, we know that Thou art true, and teachest the way of God in truth, neither carest Thou for any man: for Thou regardest not the person of men.

17. Tell us, therefore, What thinkest Thou? Is it lawful to give tribute unto Cæsar, or not?

18. But Jesus perceived their wickedness, and said, Why tempt ye Me, ye hypocrites?

19. Shew Me the tribute money. And they brought unto Him a penny.

20. And He saith unto them, Whose is this image and superscription?

21. They say unto Him, Cæsar's. Then saith He unto them, Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's.

22. When they had heard these words they marveled and left Him, and went their way.

This doctrine was sufficient warrant for the course pursued by the President, who has displayed good judgment, discriminating taste, and a proper reverence.

Mr. Chairman, let me repeat in closing that the place to show the faith to which the gentleman from Texas has so beautifully alluded is in the lives of our citizens and in the influence of our Government, and let us make our coinage the sound coinage of a faith-keeping Commonwealth. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-four minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I am not here to make a prepared speech, in the hope that I may either entertain or instruct you, but there are certain observations that I now desire to make as to the state of the country and as to the President's message, which is so broad that it covers almost every subject of national interest, and as to the state of the country, and certain particular criticisms as to certain parts of that message.

In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it will now be generally conceded throughout the country that we, at least, have a panic—a real, widespread Republican panic. It is an inexcusable panic because cotton, corn, and wheat have all brought good prices, and the agricultural and manufacturing interests of the country have prospered as never before at the very time when this panic came. It is a panic caused by tremendous stock-gambling operations all over the country, and especially in that great center of such operations, New York City. The fact that this panic stretches out from New York to every part of the country, and from the stock gamblers themselves to every class of industrious and honest citizens, is a fact for which the Republican party is entirely responsible and from which responsibility it may not hope to escape. New York would never have been the industrial and financial despot of the Republic but for the reserve-city provisions in our national banking laws, making New York the chief reserve city of the entire country and allowing other national banks in the minor reserve cities, in which list of cities are included the principal financial and industrial cities of the Republic, to keep on deposit in New York one-half of their cash reserve fund, and allowing about 4½ per cent of the cash reserve fund of all the other national banks in the country to be kept there. The national bankers can, by keeping in New York as much of their reserve fund as the law allows, obtain either credit or interest from the New York banks, and sometimes both. This system makes New York the great money center of the Republic, its financial despot, and when New York sneezes we all must take snuff. The result is that the suspension of currency payments in New York has occasioned a like suspension of currency payment by the banks throughout the country, and the stock gamblers and frenzied financiers in New York have brought financial disaster to every part of our country by being unable or unwilling to turn loose the money that is so essential to the business of the country and which has been banked up there under the provisions of the law to which I have referred. This law was enacted and is kept in force by the Republican party, and the responsibility for it is clearly upon that party.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask this question of my Republican friends: When you go to the country in the election about to come, will you say that it is a Roosevelt panic? Will you say that it is a Roosevelt panic because Mr. Roosevelt has been "Democratic in spots," to use the words of a much more distinguished Democrat than myself, or do you propose to stand by him and say, as you have been shouting and vociferating for the past four years, that the Republican party, as well as Mr. Roosevelt, is responsible for what has been done? Republican financiers in New York City and throughout the country and Republican newspapers in New York and in other States are now assuming the "safe, sane, and conservative" pose; they are now saying that Mr. Roosevelt's trust baiting, more deadly than either his "bear baiting" or his "wolf hunting," has caused the panic; they are saying that persecution of the railroads and the demagogic arraying of the people against property interests are responsible for impaired confidence and the resulting financial troubles. Only the other day the distinguished gentleman who so eloquently nominated the President at your last national convention referred to him as the "man on the barrel," exhorting the crowd to madness and almost to mob law, and the great Republican newspapers in New York printed in parallel columns the eloquent words of ex-Governor Black at the Republican convention in 1904 and the scorching words of the same distinguished gentleman before the New Hampshire Bar Association in 1907.

Now, so far as I may venture to speak for the Democratic party, I wish to say that we do not believe that Mr. Roosevelt is responsible for this panic; we do not believe that even his so-called "trust baiting" has caused it; we do not believe that his prosecution of the trusts has been wrong; we do not believe that the requirement that the railroads shall charge the public only just and reasonable rates is a mistake. If these policies have exposed overcapitalization, if they have wrung the water out of certain stocks and securities that have been foisted on an unsuspecting public, if they have bared robbery, if they have put an end to, or even lessened, discriminatory dealings and unjust charges, then we ought to be glad to submit to any little temporary flurry which has resulted from "the turning on of the light." To use substantially the President's own figure of speech, I submit that if there is a cancer in the body politic, then the knife of the surgeon must be fearlessly applied in order to save the life of the patient, even if the operation is painful. It is far better to submit to the pain of the operation in order that a sound condition may be restored than to await certain death that would come from the disease if the operation were not performed. [Loud applause.]

So-called prosperity is not so dear that we are willing to purchase it at the price of supine and unmanly submission to extortion and injustice. [Applause.] If railroad securities are so delicate and sensitive that they can be blighted and withered because the railroads are required to do simple justice to the public, then the sooner these securities are pruned to a proper size and shape the better for the public. The Democratic party does not advocate and has never advocated injustice to railroads or to any other corporation, but it has never submitted to and will never submit to injustices from the railroads or other corporations to the public even if the failure to so submit will cause not one but many panics. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, it is my desire to show you and the country how proud some of the most prominent Republicans in Congress have been, for a long time past, of these very policies that the President has advocated, and which these "safe, sound, and conservative" newspapers in the North and in the West, in the East and in the South are saying has wrecked business, ruined industrial conditions, and brought on a distressing panic. On June 26, 1906, my eloquent and able friend from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] made a speech on the floor of this House that was so forceful and so eloquent that the Republican Congressional campaign committee thought it worthy of preservation and embalmed it in your last Republican text-book for the Congressional campaign of 1906; and, by the way, there are some very interesting things in that book. I see from the back of it that you can buy it somewhere in New York City, either on Broadway or on Wall street (Broadway, I believe, but pretty near Wall street). You can buy it for one dollar, and I tell you it is worth the money—not as a source of information, for I think it is largely a mass of misinformation, but is a compilation of Republican admission and confessions, and of a whole lot of things that are going to rise up and hit the Republican party in the face whenever it becomes once more thoroughly "safe, sane, and conservative" and nominates some conservative reactionary for President. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But, to return to Mr. TOWNSEND'S speech. He said:

> The Sherman antitrust law, a Republican measure, has been enforced by a Republican Executive until illegal combinations are in great fear and trembling, while some of their constituents are either on the road to the penitentiary or hiding from the officers of justice. Under the leadership of an incorruptible, fearless, and patriotic President, supported by an equally patriotic Congress, a campaign has been made against fraud and corruption in what hitherto has been called "high places," which has given hope and courage to honest men, and placed the crown of honor where it belongs, upon the brow of true American manhood.

But the distinguished gentleman from Michigan is not the only authority that I wish to cite in this connection. Let me call your attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] made on this floor, on the very day following the speech of the gentleman from Michigan, on June 27, 1906. This speech was also considered worthy of the embalming process, and is likewise to be found in the last Republican text-book.

The gentleman from Indiana, with that exuberance and eloquence for which he is so justly famous, gave a long list of the naughty trusts that have been brought to the bar of justice by this great Republican President. He spoke of the paper trust, of the tobacco trust, the drug trust and the elevator trust (I did not know that there was one of that character until I heard his speech), of the coal trust, and of a host of other wicked trusts, a brief summary of which required nine pages of eloquence, so numerous and so naughty were they. Why, he then mentioned the Nome retail-grocery trust in far-away Alaska. On that subject he said:

> The Government's prosecution of the trusts has extended even to far-away Alaska. Complaint was made that there was a combination known as the "Nome Retail Grocers' Association," which had fixed prices and suppressed competition. The Government took action, won a decree in its favor against the combination, and the Attorney-General is advised that the effect has been very salutary.

But Mr. Chairman, let me say, without any invidious comparison, that I am about now to quote from a gentleman who is still more distinguished as an exponent of Republican policies. I refer to no less a person than the distinguished Speaker of this House, who, returning to the bosom of the people who sent him here, made on August 16, 1906, an able and eloquent speech to his own constituents, explaining what Congress had done and what the state of the country was. On the subject "trust baiting," the Speaker said:

> He [referring to the President] has been particularly zealous in administering the law against the trusts and combinations of capital which have ignored the old adage of "live and let live." The beef trust, the paper trust, the tobacco trust, the drug trust, the coal combinations, and various combinations of railroads and shippers have felt the heavy hand of the law, and learned that it is strong enough to compel them to give all a square deal. The record of trust prosecutions and investigations into their practices is too long to here recite, but it is acknowledged to be the most creditable even by our political opponents.

Not only that, gentlemen, but you have been boasting for several years past of the railroad rate legislation. You have said that the Republican party is responsible for it, assumed the credit and claimed the glory of it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] boasts of it; the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] is also proud of it, and the Speaker of this House [Mr. CANNON] commends it. Each of them so expressed himself in the speeches to which I have already referred. Not only that, but your great leaders have spoken of President Roosevelt in terms of such unstinted admiration, of such broad and comprehensive commendation, and of such fulsome adulation, that the adjectives of a vocabulary no richer than mine would stand aghast at the task of repeating what you have said on this subject. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], in the speech to which I have referred, said:

> Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, needs no encomium from me. He has already written his name high upon that illustrious roll of fame, along with those of Washington and Lincoln. Washington established the Republic; Lincoln preserved it; Roosevelt has dedicated it anew to the cause of justice and equality. The first two escaped not the calumniator and detractor. No man who has been strong and courageous for the right ever did, but the people, they who make republics, have crowned him benefactor. Some there have been who have sought to belittle our great President and have been audacious enough to attack him, but they only bear scars, and 80,000,000 American people have awarded him the victory. He at times may have been impulsive, but the impulse was born of love for the people; he has been strenuous, but the exigencies of the times have demanded it, and it has been the strenuosity of public service. He has done things, and who is there so reckless as to rise here or elsewhere and condemn what he has accomplished? By his fruits ye shall know him.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] paid the President the exceedingly valuable compliment in his speech of making no reference whatever to the Paul Morton incident.

Hear, also, the distinguished and lovable Speaker of the House break into eloquent eulogy of the President in his address to his constituents. He says:

> In the Executive Departments of the Government the record of the party has been brilliant, courageous, and honest, and the name of "Roosevelt" has become a synonym for all those qualities throughout the realms of civilization. He has been the President of all the people, and he has been tireless in his efforts to serve the people by wise, just, and fearless administration of the law.

It seems to me that the Republican party, and particularly most of its members in Congress, is thoroughly committed to Roosevelt and Rooseveltism; I believe that it would be a difficult task for them to go to the country with the contention that we have had a Roosevelt panic, and yet how are they to admit that this is a Republican panic, since the most effective campaign argument that they have ever made is the false charge that the Democratic party was responsible for the last great panic that we had and the contention that no party under whose administration a panic occurred ought to be trusted by the people with power? What becomes of them in the next election if the people should determine to apply the old-time yardstick to them? The only safety for the leading lights of the Republican party, in Congress at least, unless they are prepared to do a lot of humble-pie eating, is to nominate the Secretary of War, who at least has the manhood not to eat his own words and chew up his own record because hard times have come.

A large and ever-growing number of people in this country believe that there ought to be a revision of the tariff. Many of the Republicans even believe so. Now, when shall we have tariff revision? Now, I am going to cite you two authorities on that subject and neither of them is Democratic authority. One of them is that gentleman whose name is on every lip and was once first in every Republican heart. I do not know whether this is still true since the panic came. I refer to the President of the United States. Mr. Roosevelt says that we ought to have tariff revision after the Presidential election. If tariff revision is a good thing, if certain of the schedules need altering, why wait until after the election? If the people are suffering from wrongs and injustices, why postpone relief? Surely it is no sufficient answer to say, that to give relief from wrongs and injustices may bring on "business disturbances." The President himself contends that this is no good answer as far as the trusts and the railroads are concerned.

Let me inquire, in all sincerity and candor, why the same doctrine does not hold good when it comes to giving relief from an unjust tariff?

But I promised to quote from another distinguished Republican authority on the subject as to when we ought to have tariff revision; that authority is a Republican statesman, hardly less distinguished than the President himself, who is no less a person than the Speaker of this House, who in the same speech to his constituents, to which I have already referred, said we ought to have tariff revision when we no longer had prosperity. On that subject, the Speaker said:

> Tariff revision in time of prosperity always has halted and will always halt business activity, production, and commerce. The manufacturer will lessen his output, for he fears to pile up his product unless there is reasonable certainty of realizing its cost and a fair profit. The farmer halts in making improvements and consumes less, because there is a shortened demand for his products. The decrease in the wages of labor alone pending revision would amount to many hundred million dollars. Where there is confidence and prosperity without precedent, there would be doubt and destruction of confidence.
> I heartily indorse the platform lately adopted by the Republicans of Indiana, which in substance says that the Republican party will revise the tariff when it will do more good than harm to the masses of the people.

The latter part of this utterance smacks of some Delphic oracle, when the Speaker says that the Republican party will revise the tariff "when it will do more good than harm to the majority of the people." It is my judgment that if the Speaker is left to decide when the time shall arrive, we might possibly hope to see it twenty-four hours in advance of judgment day. Still, after all, the proposition of the Speaker was that the tariff ought to be revised when hard times came, and I think it would be a good thing for the country if we could act in accordance with the Cannon doctrine instead of the Roosevelt doctrine, and revise the tariff now, when we no longer have the prosperity of which our friends have been so long boasting. [Applause.] Under the Cannon doctrine what better time for revision than the present could be selected?

Now, let me call your attention to one specific reason why the tariff ought to be revised at once. It is an undoubted and undeniable fact that many large American manufacturers are selling enormous quantities of their products very much cheaper abroad than they are at home. Two years ago the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said on this floor that only 3 per cent of the steel output, for instance, was sold to the export trade at a lower price than it was sold at home. There was considerable debate on this floor as to whether American manufacturers were selling cheaper abroad than at home. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], as I remember it, took one horn of the dilemma and denied the allegation that there was a difference in the two prices; the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] took the other horn of the dilemma. He confessed and avoided. He said that it was a good thing, because, otherwise, American labor would have been out of employment. He said there was very little of it anyhow, and that it was necessary in order to keep American labor from going home to a hungry and foodless family. In support of his contention he cited the testimony of Judge E. H. Gary, chairman of the board of directors of the United States Steel Corporation, delivered before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, on April 11, 1906. I invite the attention of the House and of the country to this colloquy between Judge Gary and Mr. SPIGHT of Mississippi, a member of that committee.

> I would like to ask this question—

Said Representative SPIGHT—

> Has your company ever delivered your product in foreign yards at a cheaper rate than you sell to the domestic customers at your mills?
> The United States Steel Corporation is not an operating company—

Replied Judge Gary—

> But I suppose you refer to our subsidiary companies. I have already stated that we have sold some of our products for export at certain prices, but those prices were f. o. b. the mill, and we have never delivered our products abroad for less than the cost to the domestic consumer at our mill.

Now, in opposition to that statement of Judge Gary, I desire to invite the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to an article from the New York Commercial on January 2, 1908. This paper is considered to be one of the greatest commercial papers in the country, and its utterances are generally accepted as high authority on matters industrial, commercial, and financial. In the course of the article to which I refer, and which I shall read, a citation is made from the Industrial World, an iron and steel publication, of Pittsburg, Pa., which is not suspected of having any Democratic tendencies. The article reads as follows:

> Independent makers of tin plate and sheets are complaining over a report that the United States Steel Corporation has sold to Welsh tin plate makers 100,000 tons of sheet bars at $10 a ton cheaper than they are quoting to manufacturers in the United States. Incidentally, the manufacturers of tin plate and sheets are chafing because they are unable to get steel bars at a price in keeping with prevailing conditions.
> Advocates of lower duties are using the recent sale as an argument against the high tariff which enables the United States Steel Corporation to hold up the American steel makers for $29 a ton while the same product is laid down at Swansea for $21.98. The cost of transportation to Wales is about $4.10 per ton, so that the actual price received f. o. b. Pittsburg is $17.80, against $29 quoted to the consumers in the Pittsburg district.

The Industrial World, an iron and steel publication in this city, which was founded for the purpose of maintaining the high tariff, in an editorial condemning the transaction, says:

> Viewed from any conceivable standpoint these transactions deserve the severest condemnation. What does most to discredit the protective tariff system, what does most to unsettle the confidence of American consumers in the maintenance of the prices on all steel products, what does most to expose the sham in the claims made as to costs of iron and steel production, what does most to show that international price and agreements are likely to become universal, is the dumping of steel in foreign markets at prices enormously lower than the domestic rates. Nothing can do more to discredit the protective tariff system than such operations. The tariff on such material is high, yet it is only $6.70 Did the Steel Corporation tie the foreign powers up tight, and did not the latter know that if they resold, their shipments would be stopped very promptly? They could ship these bars to the United States at a profit after paying transportation charges. The cheap plea of keeping mills going and employing labor through these exports is an insult to the intelligence of the American public. How much more employment would be created if the domestic prices were reduced to half as much?

Surely the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not contend that either one of these newspapers have manufactured statements in order to help the Democrats or to hurt the Republicans. I do not believe that he will or can dispute the facts stated in that article.

When—no, I will not say thieves, but high protectionists fall out, then honest men may hope to get their dues. [Laughter and applause.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania said on the floor of this House two years ago that we had to sell to the export trade at a smaller price in order to keep American labor employed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman fourteen minutes, which is the rest of my hour.

Mr. HARDWICK. I thank the gentleman.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania contended that these sales must be made at a lower price to foreign consumers than to domestic consumers in order that the American workman might not go to a desolate home and a foodless feast, and yet this paper, which was "founded for the purpose of maintaining a high tariff," says that this very argument is an insult to American intelligence. The paper referred to contends, just as the Democratic party contended two years ago, that if the American manufacturer would sell his product a little cheaper to the American consumer, the American consumer would be able to buy more of it and labor would be employed just the same. [Applause.]

The question as to when the tariff is to be revised is entirely within the control of the Republican party. Will that party follow the Roosevelt plan and revise it after the election, or will it accept the Cannon doctrine and revise it either when we have no more prosperity or "when it will do more good than harm to the great mass of the people?" The responsibility of this question rests entirely upon Republican shoulders. We Democrats, as yet, have no power to revise it. We say that it ought to be revised now. We say that revision has been too long delayed. We have been insistent, persistent, and consistent in our demand that the people shall have relief from the burdensome duties and oppressive schedules of the Dingley tariff. So far the people have made the mistake of denying to themselves the relief that will come from revision, but surely they will realize what their true interests are before much longer, and surely when high priests in the temple of protection, like my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and this iron and steel publication which was founded "for the purpose of maintaining a high tariff," disagree—when high priests of that distinguished and exalted character differ, then the honest consumer is about to come into his own.

Who is to revise the tariff? We can not settle when it is to be revised, but I tell you, and I say it without any intention of giving personal offense to anyone, that I had as soon call on a convention of thieves to revise the laws against larceny as to call a convention or congress of people who believe in high protection for protection's sake alone to revise the tariff laws. If there is any revision of that character, it will be a revision upward and not a revision downward. If the masses of the people are to ever get any relief, the tariff must be revised in their interest and not in the interest of the protected manufacturing classes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There is one other thing in the President's message to which I wish to refer as briefly as may be in the somewhat limited time at my disposal. The one thing only, outside of some few personal views and social habits, that keeps the President from being a pretty good Democrat is that he is fundamentally and entirely a Hamiltonian. He seems to believe in the centralization of all power in the Federal Government and in the absorption of as much of the Federal power by the Executive as possible. He has never believed and will never believe in the protection and preservation of the rights of the States. The doctrine enunciated by Secretary Root that when the States no longer exercise the powers confided to them exclusively by the Constitution, then the nation must assume and exercise these powers in order to protect the people, and that it can be done by executive and judicial construction is most dangerous, destructive, and even revolutionary.

There is little doubt, however, that the President shares this belief with his Cabinet officer. In this very message of his he contends because wheat, corn, and grain are raised in many different States, and a uniform standard of grade is desirable, that therefore Congress ought to establish the national system of grading wheat, corn, and grain. The same contention might be made with equal plausibility about cotton. The President contends further that the products to which he refers, viz, wheat, corn, and grain, ought not to be admitted to interstate or foreign commerce unless they conform to the national standard. Gentlemen of the House, this doctrine is dangerous to the extreme. If the power to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is to be made the pretext and excuse for seizing upon and regulating every domestic affair and every internal concern in every State in the Union, how long will the States continue to exist, and how long will the constitutional system of government founded by our fathers, and which Republicans as well as Democrats profess to love, survive? This continuous and insidious encroachment upon the powers and rights of the States contravenes the most fundamental doctrine of the Democratic party; and as it seems to be the President's theory of the Government, I say that for that reason, in spite of the many good things that he has done, and in spite of the many noble impulses that he has had, he can never be a Democrat; and if our Republican friends console themselves with the delusion that they have ever lent him to us, then we give him back to them with our compliments. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I reserve whatever time I have left.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has two minutes remaining which he reserves.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to take the floor in my own right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized in his own time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a few observations on the subject of banking, and I want to say at the beginning that I am laboring under some embarrassment in undertaking to discuss this subject, for the reason that heretofore it has generally been conceded that no one had a right to any opinion upon any subject pertaining to banks or banking or financial matters unless he was engaged in the banking business, and I know that what I say will be looked upon with suspicion and passed over lightly by many people, for the reason that it is a well-known fact that I am not a banker. And yet, Mr. Chairman, I believe that that idea that is so prevalent is absolutely wrong, and that I, as a matter of fact, should not be called upon to apologize for having ideas on this subject, even though they may be erroneous, simply because of the lack of money on my part to enter into the banking class.

The banking business is something that everybody, in a general way, in this country is interested in. There are, however, three classes of people who are particularly and directly interested in the business. First, there is the banker; second, the depositor, and third, the borrower.

Each one of these classes is interested in the business from honorable and lawful reasons, but at the same time it must be admitted that these reasons are all selfish. The banker is engaged in the business, not for philanthropic purposes, but for the purpose of making money for himself. The depositor puts his money in the bank, not because he is anxious to have the banker make money out of it, but because it is a convenience to him and enables him better to transact his business with checks and drafts. The borrower borrows the money which the depositor has put in the bank, not because he wants to assist the bank or accommodate the depositor, but because he anticipates a profit to himself out of the transaction; he expects to make more money on the loan than the interest he has to pay to the banker to obtain it.

It is quite clear, therefore, that the banker is not the only interested person in this class of legislation. It is equally clear that in legislating on the subject we should take into consideration the welfare of the other parties having a direct interest in the subject, and should not confine our attention entirely to looking after the interests of banks alone.

While I have never been, and in my fondest hopes and dreams have never hoped to become, a banker, I have occasionally been a depositor and many times a borrower. I feel, therefore, that while I may not be entitled to speak for or represent the banker in the consideration of the subject, I have a right to a respectful hearing at your hands as representing not only the people generally, but the depositor and borrower in particular. But, assuming that these three classes of people are equally honest—we should assume that they are honest, as most of them are, and we want particularly to legislate for those who are honest—it will be found that the interests of all are identical and that legislation which would prove beneficial to one class would be equally beneficial to each of the others. In a proper sense, however, we should scrutinize closely the demands of any class of people asking for legislation applying particularly to subjects in which they have a direct interest, as men, while perfectly upright, are frequently unwittingly prejudiced in matters pertaining to their own individual business and in which they have a direct interest, financially or otherwise. Bankers are beyond question as honest and intelligent as any other class of people, yet, like the rest of mankind, are subject to the weaknesses of human nature, and when we legislate upon a subject in which they have a direct financial interest we should look with the closest scrutiny upon their purposes and should take into consideration their financial interests in the contemplated legislation.

We should consider the subject from a broad standpoint. Realizing that their views may be warped unconsciously by their interests, bearing in mind that the people generally are interested in the proposed measure, and that the business of the entire country is affected by and connected with the banking business, these reflections should govern us in the consideration of any legislation we may enact on the subject.

The very foundation of the banking business is the depositor. Without the depositor there would of necessity be no banks. The banker would be deprived of his occupation and the business world would be compelled to resort to other methods of doing business. The depositor leaves his money with the bank only so long as he has faith and confidence, not only in the soundness and stability of the bank, but in his ability to obtain his money upon demand.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that we could not better advance the interests of the people generally and of the banks in particular than to guard safely the rights of the depositors. With that in view I have introduced a bill, H. R. 159, that I will print in my remarks at this point.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 159) to secure the payment of depositors in national banks.

Be it enacted, etc., that within thirty days after the passage of this act every national bank engaged in the business of banking shall pay to the Treasurer of the United States one-fifth of 1 per cent of its deposits as shown by its last report to the Comptroller of the Currency. Any national bank organized prior to the passage of this act and subsequent to the last preceding report to said Comptroller shall pay to said Treasurer one-fifth of 1 per cent of its deposits on the day this act goes into effect.

On the 1st day of July annually after the passage of this act every national bank doing a banking business shall pay to said Treasurer one-fifth of 1 per cent of its average deposits for the preceding fiscal year as shown by the reports made to the Comptroller of the Currency during said year. Any national bank organized subsequent to the last report to the Comptroller of the Currency for that fiscal year shall pay said Treasurer one-fifth of 1 per cent of its deposits on the 30th day of June of said fiscal year. Any national bank organized after the passage of this act shall, before it is allowed to do a banking business, pay to said Treasurer one-fifth of 1 per cent of its paid-up capital stock.

SEC. 2. That the money so paid to the Treasurer of the United States as provided in section 1 of this act shall constitute a fund for the security of deposits in national banks and shall be under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall invest and disburse the same as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 3. That whenever a receiver shall be appointed for the purpose of closing up the affairs of any national bank, the Secretary of the Treasury, out of said fund, shall pay through said receiver all balances due depositors as soon as the amounts due can be ascertained, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall be subrogated to all the rights of said depositors and in the settlement of the affairs of such bank, all dividends that would have been due to said depositors shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the same shall be by him paid into and become a part of said fund: Provided, That no part of said fund shall be used for the payment of any deposit where the bank had given and the depositor accepted collateral security for the payment of same.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest said fund, or such part thereof as he may deem expedient, in the bonds of the United States, and in any future issue of Government bonds bearing not more than 2 per cent interest he shall have the right to purchase at par any part of the same with money belonging to said fund. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell any of said bonds belonging to said fund whenever it is necessary so to do for the purpose of paying depositors of insolvent national banks, as provided in section 3 of this act, and whenever, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, it shall be necessary to sell bonds belonging to said fund and there is any money in the Treasury of the United States available for the purpose of purchasing and retiring Government bonds, he is hereby authorized on the part of the Government of the United States to purchase from said fund at par any bonds that were originally purchased from the Government at par.

SEC. 5. That at the beginning of any fiscal year when the assessments hereinbefore provided for shall become due and payable, no national bank shall be required to pay any part of its assessment that would make the total amount paid by it into said fund, after giving it credit for its proportionate share of the gain and deducting its proportionate share of the loss, exceed 2 per cent of its average deposits for the preceding fiscal year, as shown by its reports to the Comptroller of the Currency, and at said time if the amount theretofore paid into said fund by any national bank, after adding its proportionate share of the gain and deducting its proportionate share of the loss, is in excess of 2 per cent of its said average deposits for the preceding fiscal year, then the Secretary of the Treasury shall, out of said fund, pay said excess to said bank.

SEC. 6. That at the expiration of the charter of any national bank, should the same not be renewed or extended, or if any national bank shall desire to go into liquidation and cease doing banking business, after the payment by any such bank of all its depositors in full, the Secretary of the Treasury shall deduct from the total amount paid into said fund by such bank its proportionate share of the losses, if any, and pay to said bank out of said fund 90 per cent of the balance.

SEC. 7. That after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall not deposit any of the money of the United States in any bank which has not complied with provisions thereof, and he is hereby authorized to deposit in any bank that has complied with the provisions of this act, without taking any collateral security therefor, any money belonging to the United States, not exceeding 5 per cent of the paid-up capital of said bank, and not exceeding in any case the sum of $10,000.

SEC. 8. That if the Secretary of the Treasury shall be unable to invest the said fund hereby created by this act in the bonds of the United States, as provided by section 4 hereof, he shall be authorized to deposit not exceeding one-half of said fund in banks complying with this act: Provided, That not exceeding 5 per cent of the paid-up capital nor more than $10,000 shall be deposited in any one bank: And provided also, That all such deposits shall draw interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum.

SEC. 9. That if any national bank shall refuse or neglect to pay its assessment within thirty days after the same shall become due, the said assessment shall draw interest at the rate of 10 per cent from the day the same became due, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall proceed to collect the amount due from said bank by due proceedings at law.

This bill provides for a guaranty of deposits in national banks by a fund which is raised by an assessment levied upon the banks in proportion to the average deposits. I have provided in section 1 that an annual assessment of one-fifth of 1 per cent shall be levied upon the average deposits in national banks as shown by their reports to the Comptroller of the Currency for the preceding fiscal year. In order that the law may have immediate force after its passage, I have provided that an assessment shall be made immediately upon the passage of the law. It seems to me that it is right that the assessment should be made upon the deposits rather than upon the capital stock, because it is the deposits that the bill undertakes to secure, and the bank therefore pays a rate in proportion to the risk assumed.

The only instance in the bill where banks would be required to pay an assessment on their capital stock would be in cases where banks are organized after the passage of the law. A bank that would be organized on the 2d day of July, for instance, if there were not some provision of this kind, would not be required to pay any assessment until the 1st day of the next July, receiving one year's benefit of the law without being assessed therefor.

In order to avoid any discrimination of this kind it is also provided in section 1 that banks organized after the passage of the law shall pay the assessment on their capital stock, which constitutes their contribution to its guaranty fund, up to the beginning of the next fiscal year. The fund so raised is to be under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in case of the failure of a national bank and the appointment of a receiver therefor the Secretary is authorized to immediately pay all the depositors of the insolvent bank, and he is subrogated to all rights of depositors, and dividends that are thereafter paid are paid into this fund instead of to the depositors. The fund thus created for the security of depositors is limited to 2 per cent of the average deposits in all national banks, and whenever a national bank has paid into this fund an amount that equals 2 per cent of its average balances, as shown by its report to the Comptroller of the Currency for the preceding fiscal year, its payments thereupon cease; and if at the beginning of any year it is found that the payments made to this fund by any bank exceed 2 per cent of its deposits, then the Secretary of the Treasury refunds to the bank this excess. This practically provides for a paid-up policy on the part of the bank.

It will be observed also that the fund created by this bill for the securing of deposits automatically increases or decreases as the deposits increase or decrease.

In my judgment the enactment of this law would not only absolutely secure depositors, but as a result there would be but few failures, and in case of a failure there would not likely be a loss to the fund, but only a temporary reduction of the fund by the withdrawal of sufficient money to pay off the depositors. It may be that one-fifth of 1 per cent is too high an assessment. I am inclined to think that one-tenth of 1 per cent would be sufficient. This is, however, a matter that is easily remedied and, as a matter of fact, is an unimportant item. When we take into consideration that a bank will be able to secure a paid-up policy for the protection of its depositors, it is not so very important what the rate of payment is; the aggregate sum paid by the bank would in any case be the same. It is well, however, to be on the safe side, and to have the assessment too high rather than too low, because under the provisions of the bill it would require several years before the fund created by it would assume such proportions that it would be regarded as absolute security, and therefore the larger the fund became the greater the security to the depositor, and therefore the greater benefit to business generally.

It would be well to consider also that when a bank reaches the stage of having paid up in full its proportionate share of this fund, the effect would at once be seen in the increased value of its stock. There can be no doubt but what the value of stock in a bank having a paid-up policy in this fund would be materially increased, so that it would be to the advantage of the bank, rather than otherwise, to pay its share of the fund as soon as possible.

If we pass this bill, or some similar bill, we eliminate from the banking business the greatest danger and the greatest peril that has heretofore assailed it. We would give to the country, and to the business all over the country, a firm foundation and a quietude that would not be disturbed by sudden flurries or by an occasional bank failure. The closing of a poor bank by the Government officials would not be followed by runs on good banks properly managed. The circulating medium of the country would not be affected and curtailed every time there is a bank failure or a perturbed money market, owing to the withdrawal of deposits and the hiding of money in secret places.

Objection has been made that a law of this kind would have a tendency to cause the good and careful banker to pay for the losses of the poor and reckless banker. It is also alleged in objection to this kind of legislation that the banker who has built up and established a business by efficient business methods would be placed on the same basis as the reckless plunger who has no regard for the rights of the people whose money he handles in his bank. While I do not believe these arguments are based on fact, but believe that absolutely the reverse would be shown to be true, yet it is a sufficient answer to say that the good banker is now, and always has been, at the mercy of the reckless banker. No one appreciates more than does the safe and careful banker the interference with his business and the injury to the same which is occasioned by the business tactics of the banker whose methods are, to say the least, questionable and unsafe.

The passage of this law would in no way change the individuality of banks or bankers; on the other hand, it would afford to all of them a stability and inspire the people with a confidence they have never heretofore entertained. There is no doubt but that the Government officials often permit a shaky bank to continue doing business simply through the fear of disastrous results that the closing of such bank would have upon the good and substantial banks in the same vicinity. The passage of this bill would prevent such conditions, and when the Government officials discovered the unsafe condition of a bank, or when the officers of such bank refused to comply with the law or the demands of said Government officials, such bank would be immediately closed by Government authority, thus relieving not only the community at large, but the safe bankers in the vicinity of such bank. The Government could then act without fear of disturbing business or injuring innocent banks, and before the offending bank had gone so far in its reckless course as to cause loss to the depositor or to the stockholder.

The objectors to the proposed law assume that such law would be detrimental to banks, when, as a matter of fact, it should be perfectly apparent to them that the reverse would be the case. Whenever you remove the fear of the depositor, you place the banking business on a firmer and more substantial basis. It can never be placed upon such a basis until this fear is removed. In order to remove it you must convince him that his deposits are not only secure, but that they are at his command at any time. Such a law, by accomplishing such result, would not only bring relief to the country generally, but would be of the greatest financial benefit to the banker himself, and by opposing such legislation he is standing in his own light.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to see every mercantile obligation in the country worth 100 cents on the dollar, of course. What is the proposition the gentleman makes—that the Government guarantee the deposits?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Or that the deposits shall be guaranteed by a fund?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Collected from the bankers?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Does the gentleman as a lawyer think the United States Government has a right to tax one institution to make up the losses of another—not as a question of revenue at all, but purely for outside purposes?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, I will say, in answer to the gentleman. I believe Congress has the right to pass any law that would be a reasonable regulation of the banks.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Without regard to whether it is constitutional or not?

Mr. NORRIS. If it is an unreasonable regulation it would be unconstitutional, but if it is held to be a reasonable regulation it would be constitutional. In my judgment we can regulate the banks, and if we do not overstep the bounds of reason, the courts would hold that our law was constitutional.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Does the law provide for State banks as well as national banks?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. It relates purely to national banks?

Mr. NORRIS. Only to national banks.

Mr. HARDY rose.

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas in a minute. The gentleman from Connecticut asks the question whether it is right to tax one man to pay the losses of another. I have just finished saying that in the banking business the good banker has always been paying the losses of the poor banker. The proposed assessment would lessen the payments of such losses in the future. The money that is paid into this fund would still remain as an asset of the bank.

To my mind the suggestion contained in the question of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] that this bill would compel one man to stand the losses suffered by another has no application whatever. In the first place, we must take into consideration the fact that a bank is a quasi-public institution. From the very nature of the case the banker, in order to make money, must have deposits. In other words, he makes his profits out of other people's money. The national bank must have a charter from the United States Government before it is allowed to do business. It is not only proper, therefore, but it is legal and right that the Government should prescribe by law the rules and regulations under which he shall be allowed to do business—under and by virtue of which he shall be allowed to receive the money of the people generally and to handle it as his own. This is no new principle even in the national banking system. We have already provided by law for a great many rules and regulations controlling national banks. If we are to reject a law similar to the one I am discussing because it provides for the regulation of the banking business, then to be consistent we ought to repeal every other law that controls and governs national banks. Moreover, as suggested before, the assessment which the bank pays into this fund is still an asset of the bank.

It is part of the resources of the bank. It is in reality part of the property of the bank. When the Secretary of the Treasury invests it or deposits it, as provided in this bill, the banks get the benefit of the accretions by way of interest. As a matter of fact, there can be no valid objection made to this kind of a law on the ground that it will wrongfully assess one party for the payment of the debts of another. The banker himself will realize the greatest benefit—the financial profit will accrue more to the banker than to any other person. Under present conditions the banker who knows that across the street is another bank doing an unsafe business spends sleepless nights, haunted by the coming of the day when the unsafe bank shall fail and his bank thus be subjected to a run on the part of its depositors. However careful and honest he may have been, he knows that when that failure does come every depositor in his institution will be filled with fear and trembling, not necessarily because they fear his bank is unsafe, but because they realize that under such conditions it is the habit of people to become panicky about their funds, and there is a rush on the bank to withdraw the same.

This class of depositors, even though they may have no fear of the solvency of the bank, know that however solvent it may be it is liable to be compelled to close its doors on account of the unwarranted fears of other depositors, and such people are forced to take steps to defend themselves and supply themselves with ready money to do business by drawing out their money deposited in the bank. The banker who knows that some other bank in his town is liable to fail commences immediately to draw in his funds. He compels borrowers to pay their loans and refuses to make loans to others in order that he may prepare himself for the run which he anticipates when the other bank fails. He therefore not only suffers untold torment of mind, but his bank is unable to make the legitimate profit in the business to which it is honestly entitled. He has funds in his bank that he would gladly loan to the borrowers who make application therefor, but in order to be prepared for the fatal day he considers it unwise to grant such requests. He not only suffers in mind while his institution loses money on account of this condition of affairs, but the community of business men in his vicinity is deprived of the legitimate and proper right to borrow money out of the bank, and in this way the entire business of the community is affected and the money that should be circulating in the hands of the people is locked up in the vault awaiting the time when the other bank shall fail and when the anticipated run on the good bank shall begin.

There are several sections in this bill which might be considered as somewhat foreign to the subject, and which might be eliminated without interfering with the main object of the bill.

Section 8 provides how the Secretary shall invest the money constituting this fund. In my judgment it would be wise to give the Secretary of the Treasury a larger discretion in this matter than is provided in this section. I think it would be wise perhaps to provide for the depositing of a larger amount of this fund in the banks.

In section 7 it is provided that the Secretary of the Treasury can deposit any funds belonging to the Government in banks that have complied with this law without taking any security therefor except such as is given by this act, limiting such deposits, however, to not exceeding 5 per cent of the paid-up capital of any bank, and not exceeding in any case the sum of $10,000.

This section, of course, could be eliminated from the bill without in any way interfering with it, but in my judgment it should remain, because by its provision the Secretary of the Treasury would be enabled to distribute the funds of the Government over the country and would not be compelled to confine himself to the larger banks and the larger cities, and, at the same time, it would give an illustration to the country at large that the Government itself had faith and confidence in the banks that have complied with the law, which would go a great way toward restoring confidence on the part of the people generally, and, at the same time, the Government would be absolutely protected and would run no risk whatever by such deposits.

While I believe the bill would be held to be constitutional by the courts, yet if there be any serious doubt on this point and it were necessary to secure votes for its passage in the House, I would have no objection whatever to the striking out of section 9, the same being the section which provides for compulsory payment on the part of the banks of the assessment provided in the bill. In lieu of this section I would substitute another which would provide that the law should apply only to such banks as voluntarily accepted its provisions. There is no doubt but what if we provided that after the passage of the law national banks should have thirty days' time in which to decide whether they should accept or reject the provisions of the bill that practically every bank in the United States would avail itself of the opportunity to come in under this law, for the reason that it would mean a profit to them as well as security to the depositor.

This bill makes no provision for any banks except national banks. In my judgment it would be difficult for Congress to properly frame a law that would permit the coming in of State banks under its provisions, and even though it could do so, it would be doubtful whether it would be wise to permit such banks to avail themselves of the provisions of this law, for the reason that they are not subject to the laws of the United States, but are controlled and governed entirely by State laws. The enactment, however, of such a law on the part of Congress would, in my opinion, be followed by the enactment of a similar law in every State of the Union, so that in a short time all the banks of our country would be practically under the same law and governed virtually in the same way. Congress passed a pure-food law, but it was conceded that this law applied only to interstate commerce. Following closely upon the enactment of this national law by Congress the different States enacted the same or similar statutes, which applied to the respective States, thus making the system complete. The same rule would prevail, and, I believe, the same custom would be followed if we enacted this law.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HARDY. I believe I agree with the gentleman entirely in his proposition for the guaranty of these deposits, but is not the question of a tax or the levying of an assessment on the bank or on the deposits of the bank for the purpose of this guaranty just as much within the purview of the Constitution as the present practice of taxing the issue of bank notes?

Mr. NORRIS. I should think so.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. May I call the gentleman's attention to one thing? He thinks so, perhaps, but if he thinks twice he will not think so. The present tax is for revenue purposes and goes into the Treasury to meet the expenses of the United States Government. In this other case it is for an individual purpose, namely, to prevent the loss of a private concern.

The gentleman says that the bank deposits will undoubtedly increase when guaranteed. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that probably 90 per cent of all the deposits in the United States to-day in banks are the result of discounting of paper, and I would like to ask him whether, in his judgment, the discounting of paper would not enormously increase at the moment the paper was discounted and the proceeds put to the credit of the depositor? Does not the gentleman think there would be an enormous increase of the fictitious deposits if they were guaranteed the moment the fake paper was discounted and the proceeds placed to the credit of the so-called depositors?

Mr. NORRIS. From the gentleman's question I judge that such a proceeding would necessitate the consent of the bank to bring about those fictitious deposits.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. That is entirely true.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I would say there is not any danger in it. If the banker wants to bring about a fictitious deposit on which he has to pay an assessment, let him do it. I do not think there is any danger of a banker doing that, because his own protection would guard against it. Besides, such a procedure would be unlawful, and we have no right to assume that the banker would do an unlawful act, especially when it would be against his interest to do so. I do not believe there is any doubt in any man's mind who has ever witnessed a panic but what if the depositor was assured that there was no danger of losing his money a run on a bank would be something unknown, and just as soon as you do insure the depositor that he will not lose his money he is not going to take it out of the bank. We all know, too, in a general way, that there are millions of dollars in hiding now, and there always have been, and that this little flurry has been the means of hiding many more millions. If this law were passed, I believe, Mr. Chairman, that within thirty days money would come out of hiding that has not before seen the light of day. Old stockings and old tin cans would be emptied, and yield up their golden treasure, and the money of the country would assume its legitimate and proper sphere in the channels of business and trade throughout the land. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NEEDHAM in the chair). The Chair will be pleased to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY].

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I am like the gentleman who has just taken his seat. I am not especially prepared to make any address upon the President's message at present, but there are some things that occur to me that seem to me to be nonpartisan and that seem only necessary to be brought to the minds of the people in order to command unanimous consent. If I can make one or two things so plain, so clear, that all men can see them, I shall have done all I hope to do.

I have attended within this last year numerous large meetings called in behalf of river and harbor and canal appropriations; and I believe that the greatest subject before the American people to-day for the advancement of the welfare of our country is the improvement of the rivers and harbors and inland navigation of this great land of ours. I want to say, however, that there is no possibility of ever making the inland navigation of the country a success until railroad regulation be first complete and perfect. I listened to the addresses of numerous members of these conventions; I heard the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House address one convention and use the expression that there ought to be some other weapon in the armory of the Government to regulate railroad freights than appropriating millions of dollars to afford paper or real water competition. His exact language was:

> The motto of the railroad is to get business. If a water rate is established, rates are put down, and some people say, "We are in favor of river improvement; we don't care if a single boat don't go on the river." It's not worth while to make a $10,000,000 improvement in a river along a railroad to make it lower its freight rate and behave itself. There ought to be in the armory of the law another authority which would compel that. So in the past when our rivers have been attempted to be improved, the railroads, instead of cooperating, have seen fit wherever proper terminals have been made and loading machinery provided, to immediately put down their rates from that point to such an extent as to discourage shipments by water from that point, and if possible lead to the abandonment and possible decay of terminals and any shipping on the river.

I want to call the attention of those Members of this House who will hear me, to certain conditions that exist to-day. I stood on the deck of a steamer running down the waters of the Mississippi for two whole days. What a glorious stream! Given us by nature! And yet I did not see one single barge floating or rolling upon those water carrying the freight of this great country of ours; a river that could carry millions and billions of tons, and yet its waters are unburdened by the freight of the land. And I saw railroads by its side loaded with saw logs even. What to-day prevents the carrying of freight on the great Mississippi River? Mr. BURTON said that as soon as any town perfected its landing facilities and the machinery to load and unload, just that soon the competition of the railroad was put into operation. In those towns that had water competition, they reduced their rates to such a point that boats could no longer travel the waters, and the boats were driven from the streams, the landing places were abandonded, the loading and unloading machinery sold or left to decay. Then the railroads raised their rates of freight. Sometimes they maintained very low rates between river points perpetually in order to prevent the establishment of water shipping routes, but while lowering rates between river points, they raised their rates to interior points so as to get the average rate that they desire to impose upon the people. Now let me state to the Members of this House the simple facts in this relation. I could state them in general terms. But in order to illustrate the general and universal practice of railroads, I will state them specifically. The freight rate on flour from St. Louis to Helena, Ark., is 20 cents a hundred, because St. Louis and Helena are both on the river. The freight rate from St. Louis to Paragould between those two places but away from the river is 60 cents a hundred pounds. Now, what is the matter? Paragould is 100 miles nearer St. Louis than Helena and freight from St. Louis to Helena by rail goes right through Paragould, yet in order to drive off freight-carrying vessels, railways will lower, and have lowered their rates to the competitive water point, Helena, and in order to recoup themselves the railroads are allowed to impose and have imposed high rates on the noncompetitive point, Paragould. The governor of Florida, addressing the Memphis convention, said that years ago he and his father owned a freight fleet on the St. Johns River, but soon after a railroad was built parallel to that river their landings and wharves were abandoned, the boats went off the river and were sold for junk, the railroads carried the freight, and St. Johns River ceased to be navigated. Not only so, but you hear advocates of river improvement say, as cited by Mr. BURTON, "We want the river improved to give us water rates if a boat never goes down the river."

I want to say that I will not stand willing to vote for one dollar of improvement for a stream for only paper navigation, or just to give one city better railroad freight rates than another. It too frequently happens that great cities do not care what rates are charged so long as they are given special low rates as compared with other cities. Let me tell you, sir, I want to get good freight rates for the cotton of my State, and that is a very important matter to the farmers of our country. We raise 3,000,000 bales of cotton annually, and on that cotton we pay an average freight of $2.50 per bale to carry it to the Gulf, a distance on the average of less than 300 miles. From my home to Galveston, which is about the average distance—260 miles—we pay 55 cents per hundred, or $2.75, per bale, and from Memphis to New Orleans, 456 miles, the railroads only charge 17 cents per 100 pounds or 85 cents per bale. That is the difference in the freight on my cotton carrying it to the Gulf and the Memphis cotton carried nearly twice as far by the side of the Mississippi River. My countrymen, does the presence of the Mississippi River enable the railroads to carry freight any cheaper than they could if the river were not there at all? They carry a train load of cotton from Memphis to New Orleans, say 1,000 bales, and the freight charge is $850. They take the same train and crew, the same engine, and the same cars and put them on the track at my home and carry the same amount of cotton only 260 miles, and when it gets to its destination the freight charge is $2,750 or $1,900 more.

When I ask a railroad man why he makes this discrimination between my town and Memphis, he says, "It is necessary to make that cheap rate in order to get business at Memphis." But, I ask him, "Do you want the business if it is not a profitable one?" If he has good sense enough to know that I know the truth when I hear it, he answers, "No." Then I ask him, "There was a profit in your transportation of that freight at $850 per train load?" and he answers, "Yes." I ask him then, "Does the presence of the Mississippi River, with which you were competing, enable you to carry freight any cheaper? Did it make your cross-ties last any longer? Did it make your rails any better? Did it pay the wages of your brakemen or engineers, your firemen or conductors?" and he answers, "No." "Then you could handle that freight and haul it just as cheaply if the Mississippi were 1,000 miles away as you do to-day, could you not?" and he must say, "Yes." Strange that when last summer our State railroad commission reduced freight on cotton from my town to the Gulf from $3 to $2.75 per bale the railroads were ready to enjoin the commission and almost ready to swear the reduction would bankrupt them, and yet I say that if the railroads were not voluntarily bankrupting themselves in hauling cotton from Memphis to New Orleans at 85 cents per bale, they were and are robbing the people of Texas in charging them $2.75 per bale. Whenever the laws of our land recognize that railroad rates are to be regulated according to the value of the service performed, and not according to the contiguity of rivers or waterways, then they will begin to start aright upon the question of railroad regulation and inland water navigation. And I want to tell you when railroads are by law forbidden to lower their freight rates between water points in order to break up water transportation and to recoup themselves by raising rates at interior points, you will have done more to navigate the Mississippi and our inland streams in a day by the passage of that law than you will by voting hundreds of millions of dollars for the improvement of your river transportation. [Applause.]

So far as actually navigating the Mississippi between the city of St. Louis and New Orleans, if the present policy of railroad rates is to be continued, every dollar that has been expended on that river by the Government had just as well be cast into the sea. Listen to what Mr. Vance, chairman of the Ohio Valley Improvement Association, said at Memphis:

> Ten years from the introduction of steam navigation on the Mississippi the whole West was a scene of active enterprise. The rich products of the West were gathered from the remotest tributaries of the Ohio on the east, and from the Red River on the west, and were transported by hundreds of magnificent steamers, traversing every river and every great stream between the Allegheny ranges on the east and the Rocky Mountains on the west. Gentlemen, where to-day are the hundreds of magnificent steamers traversing the Mississippi laden with the rich treasures of the Ohio and Red rivers? Is there one steamer plying between New Orleans and St. Louis, where 7 miles of paved wharf awaits its coming anxiously? Is there, in fact, one steamer plying between New Orleans and Memphis? When the Orleans, in the very early years of the nineteenth century steamed down the Ohio, her whistle sent the noble red man scampering from the banks of the river to the thickest woods when its echoes shrieked at every bend. To-day, and I say it in all kindness, the noble red man might line the banks of the Mississippi in peace, so far as the whistle of a steamer on the river is concerned, unless the steamer bore the brand of the Ohio on her pennant, for none others ply your waters in the through trade from the great city of St. Louis to New Orleans.

I want to add, from what I saw, that if the red man wasn't full of imagination he wouldn't often be scared by any Ohio steamers, for I sat on the open deck of a steamer for two whole days, moving from St. Louis to Memphis, and during that time saw not one freight-laden vessel, and yet the Mississippi is capable to-day of carrying more freight than almost any of our rivers will or ever can be made, but she is a useless, slumbering giant.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to some few other facts currently known. The railroads in the State of Georgia, to transport rock from the quarries of north Georgia charge 20 per cent more than they do to transport rock from the Vermont quarries down to north Georgia. Attention was called to this fact in that hot campaign of last year in your State [turning to Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia], and it was shown that those quarries from Vermont furnished rock for southern Georgia with cheaper freight than the quarries from north Georgia, 1,000 miles nearer home could do it. Why? Because the quarries from Vermont might load their rock on the Connecticut River and carry it to the Atlantic Ocean and then up the little streams to your south Georgia building towns, and in order to kill that transportation by water the railroads arbitrarily reduced the rates of freight from the Vermont quarries through to Georgia and raised their rates on the helpless north Georgia quarries to recoup themselves, as they do the freight on other commodities to other helpless points. Only the other day C. S. E. Holland, president of the Intercoastal Canal Association, at Victoria, Tex., said at Houston, Tex.:

> There is one question that is deserving of the most careful and considerate attention at the hands of this convention, and that is the question of craft for navigation after we receive the waterway. I received a letter some time since from an old citizen living near Matagorda. He inclosed a clipping from a Brazoria newspaper, which contained the information that the railroads were charging 25 cents per 100 for shipping cotton from Brazoria to Galveston, the gin being located on a river bank, the river with a sufficient depth and a connection with our canal at Velasco so that boats can now carry it to Galveston, but no boats to carry it and the result was that a haul of 1 mile to the railroad station over bad roads was necessary. This gentleman stated that he had experience in putting on a boat and reducing the rate in a similar case, but that so soon as the railroad met the rate, he was left without tonnage and was compelled to sell his boat for less than half its cost, because he could not make a living with the small amount of freight he could procure. He further stated that the railroads would put the old rates back again so soon as the boats are eliminated.

Mr. Holland urges the formation of a sort of volunteer association of patriotic citizens, who would guarantee and furnish tonnage to the shipowner even when the roads were offering to ship cheaper, but surely no student of human nature believes such plan possible. To depend on men in any city using boats when it is to their pecuniary interest to use railroads shows strong faith, but I fear very little knowledge. The truth is that the railroad capital of this country has got the private citizen by the throat, and is allowed under our laws to shake him as it pleases and to take from him, under railroad tariffs, just what it will. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, if we are to start right the slate should be wiped off, and I defy any man to show me where last year's legislation has yet resulted in the reduction of any freight rates. In fact, it is about admitted that since the action of last Congress the railroads have been making a concerted raise in rates under claim of necessity for increased expenditure to enable them to handle the freight. Yet, even last fall, at a time when it was claimed there was a congestion of freight and a dearth of cars and no way to transport our freight, and when James J. Hill was appearing to champion waterway improvement and urging the necessity of extravagant railroad bond issues to build or better equip roads, at that very time the Southern Pacific Railroad Company applied to the Commission at New Orleans for leave to reduce their rates on cotton from 18 to 12 cents a hundred pounds. Why? They wanted to get the little traffic that was going down the bayou from Houston to Galveston and then across the Gulf. They wanted to cut that out. They could ship over 300 miles from Houston—from Houston to New Orleans—for 12 cents a hundred pounds, but they demanded 55 cents a hundred pounds for 260 miles of transportation from my town, and were threatened, as they said, with bankruptcy because they were not allowed to charge 60 cents.

It is a great and absolute truth that no railroad can haul any given commodity, in a given quantity, through any place cheaper than it can haul it to that place. We have on our statute books a law which says in substance that no railroad shall charge more for hauling freight to a place than through it, or more for a short haul than for a long haul; but there is added to that the ingenious phrase, "provided conditions are similar," and whenever you get a railroad before a court in order to justify a greater charge for a short haul than a long haul they can always show that conditions are not the same, and they actually boldly present to courts, as a right they claim, that in order to "get business" they ought to be allowed to lower their rates at possible water-competing points and raise them at noncompeting points to recoup themselves or to support themselves while they are crushing out competition. They do not use these words, but that is what their claim means; and stranger than the claim is the fact that courts declare "the law allows and the court doth award the right," and courts allow pronounced in their presence without rebuke the monstrous doctrine that the railroads' only rules by which to fix rates are, first, "to get business," and second, "to tax the traffic all it will bear." If railroads are required to compete with waterways all along their line—that is, to fix rates at their water-competing points no lower than they do at noncompeting points—then if they take the traffic it is well. It simply shows that railroads can ship cheaper than waterways; but that is not true, and none know it better than the railroads. Given fair competition and the railroads will haul the costly and perishable freight and water will haul the cruder stuffs—coal, logs, coke, timber, etc.—at one-fifth the cost railroads can afford to haul them. Under the cutthroat competition heretofore all water transportation has been destroyed and not a river, not a canal in the United States is freely used. I say that if we should introduce and pass a bill which will provide that no railroad shall ever charge more for hauling a given quantity of freight of a given character to a place than they do through that place and beyond it, you will cut off more charges that are wrong and which are imposed upon and collected from the people than the salaries of all the officials of the Government would amount to per annum. I have introduced just that bill—H. R. 4801.

My countrymen, I want the people of America to take up this question. I would like to see the Congress of America lead in that respect, and not wait till they are driven by an outraged public opinion, after the people have dumped their millions into unnavigated rivers. This is a nonpartisan question; this is a patriotic question, and every man who wants simple justice done to the great mass of the American people and wants to take from one special class the power of levying, at will, a tax upon the shoulders of the people, will join in some effort to bring about this legislation. [Applause.] Now, we are talking about building a canal from Chicago down to the Mississippi, on by St. Louis to Memphis, and the purpose is to lower the freight rates to Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, and the big river cities. The purpose should be to stop the discrimination in railroad freights between different cities based on the "Get business and tax the traffic all it will bear" doctrine, and by increasing freight-carrying facilities and giving cheaper transportation by water to cruder commodities, to lower freight rates all over this land. I received a communication from the Oklahoma Traffic Association, with a call for an inland communities convention, in which they say much lower charges are made to and from cities on navigable, or so-called navigable, streams than to interior towns, the freight often being handled right through the latter towns, and they detail instances where inland towns are penalized in order to meet or keep down navigation, but even they do not seem to grasp the idea of their true remedy. They fear fake navigation, fake waterways, fake competition; what they need to fear is the fake pretext by railroads that they can and have a right to charge less from water competitive points and more from nonwater competitive points. They may be sure that no mere paper navigation will ever reduce rates unless the railroads reduce them from fear that the paper navigation will become real navigation or from other selfish motives.

Let me give you a further illustration of this matter. This is pertinent and germane. In the southeast of Texas there exists a vast forest of long-leaf yellow pine, the best building material that God ever caused His sun to make grow, and this pine is being cut and sawed into lumber and fast destroyed. The railroads approaching that vicinity came together and they agreed upon a freight rate, and they charged the people of Texas a higher rate of freight on that lumber than they do the people of Illinois and the Middle West. What is the matter? From Beaumont to my town the freight on lumber is 18½ cents a hundred pounds, and to Memphis, right by my door, the rate is 16 cents per hundred pounds—nearly $2 a thousand feet more to take the lumber from the mills of Texas and lay it down at the door of the Texas inhabitant than they charge to take the same lumber and carry it to a far-distant State and lay it down for consumption there. The children of Illinois—and I say it in all kindness—have no right to build their homes out of lumber grown in Texas, under the protection of the laws of Texas—I say they have no right to build their homes cheaper than we, the sons of Texas, may build it of the same lumber. [Applause.] Your railroads operate to reverse the laws of tariff, and instead of protecting each locality and preserving its natural advantages, its production and its commerce, it carries away our products and transports them to alien and foreign States, and raises the price of commodities to the home consumer by placing upon his shoulders the burden of carrying the commodities to distant lands and discriminating against him in favor of the alien.

We ask for justice. Let every community have the right of its own proximity, the rights that have by some legerdemain been taken away from them. We stand in the position of the poor fellow in the Bible—and it is proper, since it is the fashion to-day to quote the Bible now—who had but 1 talent and who hid it away, and even that which he had was taken away from him. If we do nothing to protect our rights and improve our advantages [laughter]; if we stand by and see our birthright turned over to another without a fight, I think I see more clearly than ever before the justice of the treatment of that fellow in the parable who had but 1 talent and didn't know what to do with that. [Applause.] And we poor Democrats down in Texas have too little. We had our lumber, we had our timber, and we had our public domain; we gave that to the railroads, or largely so; we had our lumber; we thought it was ours yet, but the millmen went before our commission and said to them openly, "If you reduce the freight on lumber to points in Texas, we will raise the price of it, and the people shall not get the benefit of it." I thought it was a great lumber trust combining with a great railroad trust—they certainly made a noise like it—and when the railroad men came before the State commission to resist reduction of rates on lumber we found representatives of the lumber mills with them, standing shoulder to shoulder, and urging the railroad commission of Texas not to reduce the rates of freight on lumber to points in Texas. A strange contention for them. Then I began to figure it out to see what was the matter, and I found that those vast mills and fields of magnificent timber sought a wider market so that they could go out to the broad prairies of the Middle West, and in an unlimited demand for lumber raise prices from day to day and week to week, as they did, while if they were confined by the freight rates to Texas only their consumption would possibly not reach their production and prices might go down.

So the railroad men and the lumber men combined, and the lumber man joined the railroad man to resist the reduction of freight, and we found them shoulder to shoulder and arm in arm, threatening the people and the commission if they should seek to regulate freight rates. And so the Texan pays the added freight to reach a wider field of demand in order to raise the price of the lumber he must buy. This vast country of ours has seen the railroads grow and prosper, as in God's name I would have them do, but I want to tell you when you see such fortunes builded up as have been built up in the manipulation of stocks and bonds and the reorganization of railroad companies so that in a generation a Harriman and a Morgan and a Ryan can arise, it is time to pause—men who count their wealth, not by the thousands or millions even, but who may say that the dollars that represent the wealth of which they are possessed are as numerous as the sands on the seashore or the stars in the firmament; that when that is true under the operation of any system or any civilization, it behooves the men who think for the people to stop, to give pause and see if some remedy can not be had. What I appeal to this House for is the passage of the law—and you will find in all the inland points where the people meet together that they indorse it—that shall say to the railroad companies, you shall not charge more for the short haul than for the long one, and leave off your conditions. Say, by law, you shall not charge more to haul to Corsicana than you do to haul through Corsicana to Memphis, 700 miles farther; you shall not charge more to haul from St. Louis to Paragould than you do to haul a hundred miles farther, through Paragould on to Helena—not three times as much, any way. I simply ask that the thinkers of Congress—and I want to say that it does not depend on whether they are Republicans or Democrats, for there are as many Republicans in this land of ours who are suffering from the injustice of wrong freight rates as Democrats—I want to say to the thinkers that I do not believe your commission can very perfectly regulate, say, ten millions of specific freight rates, but this Congress can pass laws establishing just and great principles that must not be violated, and that will be self-enforcing.

I have introduced several bills which seem to me of this character—one a bill requiring cooperation between railroads and waterways; one to prevent railroads raising rates without consent of the Interstate Commerce Commisson; one to prevent monopoly in transportation on waterways, but the chiefest of these is the long and short haul bill which I have mainly discussed.

Mr. Chairman, I have said more than I had any idea of saying when I arose, and I should not have addressed this assembly to-day but for the fact that the message I have tried to give comes with me from my people. In every village of my district I talked the matter over with our people, and I have yet to find the first one who believes that it is right or just, or ought to be permissible, for a railroad to tax at will the helpless intermediate points in order that they might kill out all water navigation and have the monopoly of transportation. I have talked with Members of this House from the East and from the West, from the North and from the South, and they all tell the same tale of unjust discrimination and destruction of water traffic in their sections, and House bill No. 4801 will pass if it ever reaches a vote.

I append herewith as a part of my remarks the following:

A bill (H. R. 4801) to prohibit railroad companies from charging a greater freight rate for transportation for short distances than for longer distances covering the same and additional track mileage for the same commodities and class of freight in the same quantities.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after January 1, 1909, it shall be unlawful for any railway company or companies acting together to charge a greater rate of freight per pound, per 100 pounds, per ton, or per carload for hauling any kind, class, or commodity of freight in any given quantity and any given method or manner over any given part and portion of the roads owned, operated, or controlled by them covering the distance between two points located upon said road or roads than shall be charged by said company or companies acting jointly per pound, per 100 pounds, per ton, or per carload for hauling the same kind, class, or commodity of freight in the same given quantity and the same given method and manner a greater distance, which greater distance shall include the given shorter distance and identical part and portion of said road or roads.

SEC. 2. That this statute shall apply to all shipments of foreign or interstate commerce and no other.

SEC. 3. That any intentional violation of any of the provisions of this act by any officer, agent, or employee of any railroad company be punished by imprisonment for not more than one year nor less than one month.

A bill (H. R. 11354) to prohibit railroad companies from raising the freight rate on any class or commodity of interstate freight without first submitting their action so raising such rate to the Interstate Commerce Commission and securing its approval thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act it shall be unlawful for any railway company engaged in the transportation of interstate commerce to amend or alter its schedule of freight rates as to any articles of interstate commerce or any class or commodity of freight which shall fall within the meaning of interstate commerce in any manner whatsoever, that the effect thereof would be to raise the cost of transportation of such article of commerce, or such class or commodity of freight, or in any manner to change or alter their classification of freight or any conditions of shipment of same so as to raise the cost of the transportation thereof to the shipper without first having obtained the consent and permission of the Interstate Commerce Commission to such advance rate and cost.

SEC. 2. That such consent and permission shall only be granted by the Interstate Commerce Commission upon application of the railroad company or companies desiring the same and after due notice given of such application in accordance with rules and requirements hereafter to be prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that said Interstate Commerce Commission shall in all cases, after due notice and hearing, grant or refuse the application so made as in their judgment shall seem right and just, and that the action and decision of such Commission thereon shall be conclusive and final, but shall not be taken to defeat the right of such railway company or companies to make a second application in the same manner as the first, nor in any manner to prevent a subsequent lowering of such freight rate or charge for transportation, such lowering to be made in any lawful manner or upon any lawful order of the Commission: And provided further, That this act shall not in any manner be construed to deny the right to any railway company or companies, by mandamus, to compel said Interstate Commerce Commission to grant such permission in any case in which they may be shown to be in equity entitled to such mandamus from any court of lawful and competent jurisdiction.

A bill (H. R. 11346) to compel and require railroad companies to cooperate with shippers upon inland navigable waterways.

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter all railway companies whose lines of transportation shall cross or lie in close proximity to any inland navigable river, stream, lake, or canal shall be required to make and provide reasonable and proper connecting facilities for the transfer of freight from any such stream, river, lake, or canal to and upon their said road and for the transfer of freight from any such road or roads to the wharves, landing, and loading places upon such rivers, streams, lakes, and canals whenever and wherever ordered so to do by the Interstate Commerce Commission and under such reasonable terms and conditions as shall be ordered by such Commission, after due and reasonable notice and hearing, and such railroad company or companies shall be required to receive any such freight from such shipper upon such rivers, streams, lakes, and canals and to deliver freight to such rivers, streams, lakes, and canals for transportation in the same manner and under the same regulations as they are now required to receive freight from and deliver freight to connecting railroads: And provided further, That all railroads be required, at the election of any shipper, to receive and carry freight from any point to any such waterway connecting points and to ship the same via such waterway at the request of the shipper and to give through bill of lading therefor to the shipper just as is now done in case of shipment over two or more connecting railways: And provided further, That the charge for any such shipment, in the aggregate, that is, the combined charges for rail and water transportation, shall in no case exceed the sum of the separate rates for the transportation of such shipments by water and by rail over the respective water and rail routes over which same may be transported.

A bill (H. R. 11355) to prevent combinations and monopolies for the destruction of fair and legitimate competition upon inland waterways.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall hereafter be unlawful for any person or persons, any firm or corporation, with the purpose and intent of destroying competition and acquiring a monopoly of transportation upon any of the inland waterways of the United States, to charge a less freight rate for the transportation of any interstate commerce upon any such waterways than will be sufficient to afford to the carrier a reasonable and proper profit and reward upon his capital and labor invested and performed in the transportation of such commerce.

OKLAHOMA TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
Oklahoma City, Okla., October 31, 1907.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY, M. C., Corsicana, Tex.

DEAR SIR: I thank you sincerely for the full expression of your views on the waterway and transportation questions of the day as outlined in your letter of 28th instant.

You may rest assured that our primary object in joining in the call for this convention is to oppose unjust discrimination in freight rates by railroads. It is my idea that as nearly as possible all railway rates should be put upon a mileage basis, not necessarily, you understand, upon a mileage scale, but that the distance and character of the service performed should be the principal factor in determining rates. We are not in any sense opposed to the improvement of waterways which are capable of actual regular and continuous transportation of freight in a manner to satisfy the demands of present-day commerce.

It is, however, our firm belief that the present theories of rate making by rail carriers as based on so-called water competition are entirely wrong and unjust to the majority of the people of the Western States. We believe that water-competition rates should be made only between the points between which actual water transportation exists, and then only on commodities which can actually be transported by water. You are no doubt thoroughly familiar with the practice of railways to make much lower rates from and to such favored so-called water points as Fort Smith, Kansas City, Omaha, and Little Rock, mile for mile, than they make from and to inland towns like Fort Worth, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Lincoln, and the thousands of smaller places similarly situated. This condition exists not only on freight which might under certain favorable conditions be transported by boat, but on all classes and commodities, including vegetables, fruits, potatoes, and other perishable freight, which would never be moved by boats when possible to ship by rail, no matter what difference in rate existed between the two routes. We believe that railroads should not be permitted to make these low rates to and from favored points, charging inland towns enough to make up to them what they lose in these instances. On the other hand, we do not see why one point is entitled to any better rates, service considered, than another, but believe that all points should be put upon substantially the same basis, which should be fixed as low as possible, leaving to the carrier a fair remuneration for the service performed.

To explain our position a little more clearly, will give an illustration. The rates in window glass in carloads from the numerous glass factories in southeastern Kansas to the points shown are as follows:

| | Cents. |
|---|---|
| To Kansas City; average distance, 165 miles | 20 |
| To Wichita; average distance, 120 miles | 20 |
| To Oklahoma City; distance, 200 miles | 32 |
| To Fort Worth; average distance, 400 miles | 70 |
| To Corsicana; average distance, 550 miles | 75 |
| To Houston; average distance, 700 miles | 45 |

Though there is absolutely no water competition from these factories to either Kansas City or Houston, you will see that both of them have much better rates per mile than any of the other points named. These low rates are made on a paper theory that as these favored points are so-called water points on traffic from other directions, that they should also have low rates from western territory to meet the competition of eastern glass factories. You will readily see that if the railroads make any money hauling glass 700 miles to Houston for 45 cents, they certainly make an extortionate profit on a 400-mile haul to Fort Worth and a 550-mile haul to Corsicana at the rates named. It is our idea that all of these rates should be re-arranged to make a resultant basis fair to all, which would give rates about as follows:

| | Cents. |
|---|---|
| Wichita | 20 |
| Kansas City | 24 |
| Oklahoma City | 28 |
| Fort Worth | 55 |
| Corsicana | 60 |
| Houston | 65 |

Numerous other examples of similar cases could be given, for this is but an illustration of the general theory of rate making in the West, and it is this general theory that we seek to overthrow.

Our position is well outlined by the resolutions adopted by the Farmers' National Congress of America which met at Oklahoma City a couple of weeks ago, of which I attach copy hereto.

This general subject is one of vital interest to this western country and particularly as you have given the matter study, we hope that you will meet with us at Wichita and give us the benefit of your views and experience in Congress.

Very truly, yours, W. V. HARDIE, Secretary.

Resolutions adopted by Farmers' National Congress, September, 1907.

Whereas it is agreed that the freight problem is one of the most important before the people of this country to-day, and we believe that the public should be educated to a proper solution of the problem; and

Whereas we believe that the improvement of waterways will partially solve the transportation problems of the day by affording additional means to transport a portion of the present congested traffic on our railways; and

Whereas we believe that great care should be exercised in carrying out this great work that the people's money be expended only where such relief to freight congestion may be reasonably expected; and

Whereas numerous appropriations are being and will be sought for the improvement of waterways which can not afford such relief, but are desired only with a view to obtaining from the railways lower freight rates for a few communities at the expense of the people at large; and

Whereas we believe that the true solution of the rate-regulation problem lies with the Congress of the United States through the Interstate Commerce Commission and through the various State railway commissions, which have power to grant just and fair rates to all, thus saving to the people the vast sums of money needed to improve many small streams: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Farmers' National Congress in convention assembled, That we favor the improvement of such waterways as have been or are susceptible of being made actual mediums of regular and permanent transportation, of a character to supply the demands of present commerce.

Resolved further, That we earnestly request the Congress of the United States to so amend the interstate-commerce act that the common carriers can not set up water competition as a defense for ignoring the "long and short haul clause" and for making freight rates to and from one section lower than to another, service considered, unless such water competition is susceptible of being maintained continuously and permanently.

Resolved further, That the interstate-commerce law should be so amended as to declare that when a through rate is higher than a combination of two or more local rates it shall be prima facie evidence that the through rate is too high and that the combination rate should be considered the reasonable rate for future application.

And resolved further, That we are unalterably opposed to legislation which aims to control common carriers by interfering with State control or by overriding State laws or regulations, as such legislation will work a hardship to our agricultural interests and an injustice to the law-abiding people of the separate States.

Letter written by Rufus Hardy to W. V. Hardie, secretary executive committee Oklahoma Traffic Association, but which reached Wichita after the inland communities convention had adjourned and was never delivered.

NOVEMBER 14, 1907.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OKLAHOMA TRAFFIC ASSOCIATION,
W. V. HARDIE, Secretary, Wichita, Kans.

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of your letter of November 9, addressed to me at Corsicana. I sincerely regret my inability to be with you and address your convention. My estimate of the importance of your convention has been heretofore stated to you, and I would give much of my personal time and effort if I could begin to get impressed upon the people and lawmakers the absolute necessity of preventing discrimination between cities and of utterly and entirely ignoring water facilities in fixing railway rates. Freight rates should be absolutely based upon the value of the service rendered. Discrimination for supposed advantage of certain localities must be absolutely abolished. If the railroads are given the merest pretext or the slightest permission to make any discriminations, we will continue and surely continue to have favored and nonfavored points. Your statement, "It is a fact that to-day even on the great Mississippi practically no freight moves by boat," is absolutely true and will remain true until the wisdom and necessity of my proposition prevails over the greed of railways and great-favored cities. I did not know what percentage of freight handled on rivers to-day was carried by boat lines owned by the shippers and maintained for the sole purpose of keeping down railroad freights, but your statement that a great percentage of it is so owned only confirms what I have repeatedly contended, to wit, that the railroads have purposely and designedly killed water transportation and have been blindly permitted to do so by our laws, which authorize them to make any kind of rates to and from water competitive points and to tax the noncompetitive points by way of recoupment.

I go further and state that they make these low rates even to places where there never has been a boat upon the stream and on commodities that never would be carried by boats if the boats were there in order to keep such places from interesting themselves in the installation of actual water transportation, and that they have thereby secured, unconsciously, it may be, the cooperation of great cities, or at least their acquiescence in their discrimination, which, while killing water transportation, gives to such cities unjust advantage and to the roads entire monopoly of transportation. I pray for the strength to impress these great truths, as they ought to be impressed, upon Congress, upon legislatures, and upon courts. The two rules and the only two rules by which railroads are governed, as they admit and avow, in fixing freight rates, are, first, "to get business;" second, "to tax the traffic all it will bear." And these two rules should provoke the righteous indignation of every man, true to the people, who has sense enough to understand their workings. I hope to help build up a real inland waterways system of freight transportation. I hope to see the bulk of such freight as coal, cement, brick, hard woods, iron ore, and all cheap and imperishable products carried largely by water. And they constitute about 65 per cent of the total tonnage now carried by rail. I hope thereby to see the actual transportation facilities of our country trebled and quadrupled within a few years; to see railroad freight congestion a thing of the past, and to see all freight rates reduced to a rational basis, under the firm regulation and limitation fixed by law; to see inland cities surrounded by local favoring conditions build up, and prosper, as their energy and God's gift entitle them to. Every statement I have made might be a text for illustration, elaboration, and appeal before our lawmaking bodies and for the enforcement of the proposition you make in these words: "What we need is a general uniform system of rates, based on the service performed by the railroads."

Sincerely, yours,

RUFUS HARDY,
Member of Congress, Sixth District, Texas.

BANK OF GORDONSVILLE,
Gordonsville, Tenn., December 16, 1907.

Hon. RUFUS HARDY, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Washington correspondent to the Nashville Banner of November 21 gave a sketch of your views on the railroad freight question. In my opinion there is no subject upon which national legislation is needed worse.

The Southern Railroad charges about twice as much per hundred to ship from Nashville to this place as it does to ship to Carthage, 6 miles beyond on the same road. The courts condemn rebates to individuals, but allow unjust discrimination against different points to pass unnoticed. This discrimination is more evil and unjust in its workings than rebating. Making a long haul for less than a short one forces the shipper at intermediate points to pay excessive rates to replace the loss sustained by the long haul. This unjust practice allows the railroads to rob one customer and give it to another. It would be almost impossible for the States to regulate this evil, but a very short law by the National Congress could set this matter right. A law to prohibit a long haul for less than a short one on the same line would allow railroads to compete with other transporting lines if they wished to, without injustice to others. I think you are on the right road. I think the people have a right to ask for protection against this evil practice.

Respectfully,

WM. GWALTNEY.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, as we are in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, considering the message of the President of the United States, it is my desire to make a few remarks upon two phases of the message, and as a basis for what I have to say quote from the message these paragraphs:

A combination should not be tolerated if it abuse the power acquired by combination to the public detriment. No corporation or association of any kind should be permitted to engage in foreign or interstate commerce that is formed for the purpose of, or whose operations create, a monopoly or general control of the production, sale, or distribution of any one or more of the prime necessities of life or articles of general use and necessity.

When the Department of Agriculture was founded there was much sneering as to its usefulness. No Department of the Government, however, has more emphatically vindicated its usefulness.

The two citizens whose welfare is in the aggregate most vital to the welfare of the nation, and therefore to the welfare of all other citizens, are the wage-worker who does manual labor and the tiller of the soil—the farmer.

No growth of cities, no growth of wealth, can make up for any loss in either the number or the character of the farming population.

Farmers must cooperate with one another and with the Government, and the Government can best give its aid through associations of farmers.

These expressions of the President touch on subjects of vital importance to the American people.

From the time the simple shepherd led his confiding flock over the Judean plains until now, when the great harvesting machines cut and bind and thrash the grain in the field, the people of the rural districts have fed and clothed the world.

In the early morn of the world the meats and skins of goats and sheep furnished food and raiment for mankind, and to-day the great Webb steam compress presses the cotton produced by the farmers into the smallest possible space and it is sent to the remotest bounds of the earth.

Beef which comes from the rural districts is embalmed in the great packing houses, and with pork and beans travels over the broad ocean and across the high seas.

Whether we be robed in silk and fine purple, or dressed in linen, cotton, or skins, our apparel must first pass through the hands of the sturdy yeoman. The corndodger, rolled oats, rice pudding, and poundcake have all been through the farmer's bin.

The commercial milk which nourishes the infant, the compound lard which nauseates the adult, and the prophylactic fluid which disinfects the dead all originate with our friend, Agricola.

Agriculture is the basis for all other industries; as the ebb and flow of the tide in the ocean, so other industries rise and fall with the prosperity and the adversity of the farmer.

The farmers of America not only feed and clothe the people of this country, but they supply one-third of the grain and three-fourths of the cotton used by the entire world. After feeding and clothing this country the farmers of America furnish annually over $800,000,000 worth of their products to foreign customers.

In this country alone over 2,000,000 people are dependent upon manufacturing for a living. If some great calamity should prevent the farmers from making a crop these people would be overwhelmed; woe and want would go hand in hand; misery and destitution would stalk in the land.

If the boll weevil should destroy the entire cotton crop of the country, hundreds of thousands of manufacturing people in this country and in Europe would be thrown out of employment and their hungry throats would send up a wail of lamentation for bread.

For this fiscal year there has been appropriated by Congress $250,000 to circumvent the ravages of the boll weevil, $150,000 to destroy the cattle tick, about $50,000,000 for the benefit of the rivers and harbors of the country, in all of which measures the farmers are directly interested. The first agricultural appropriation bills passed by Congress carried $1,000 annually. Now these bills aggregate over $7,000,000 annually.

Not only do I favor these increased appropriations for the benefit of the farming class of people, but I want millions added to the list for good roads, signal-service reports, food inspection, and I want to see the post-office appropriation bills provide for the establishment of rural free-delivery routes all over the country.

I stood with the farmers and laboring people in their demands for the railroad rate bill which prevented discrimination in freight rates and prevented officers from riding on passes, the bill which provided for the investigation of the New York and the New Orleans cotton exchanges, with a view of checking the gambling in cotton futures; the pure-food law, the denatured alcohol bill, which was intended to afford cheaper light and fuel and lessen the evil of the Standard Oil Company's iniquitous monopoly; for the election of United States Senators by a direct vote of the people, and the bill preventing corporations from contributing campaign funds.

That the great insurance companies should pay their presidents $100,000 and $150,000 per annum without the consent of the policy holders, whose money they were spending, was bad enough, but when they paid $50,000 each into the Republican campaign fund and took this money from the widows and the orphans of the unsuspecting policy holders it was time to call a halt.

But the money power has become so bold and its brazen effrontery so audacious as to strike with terror the well-meaning citizen, whose chief desire is to be allowed to quietly pursue the peaceful avocations of life.

While wealth, per se, is desirable and the proper use of wealth is greatly to be commended, still when enormous sums of money are accumulated for the purpose of corrupting the electorate and for the purpose of converting a democracy into a plutocracy it is time for the people to raise their hands in holy horror. But when these enormous sums of money enable the individual and the corporations possessing them to form trusts in restraint of trade, stifling competition and strangling to death those weaker than they who are endeavoring to make a legitimate living, it is high time for the American people to cast about for a remedy to save themselves from being engulfed in this vortex of certain destruction.

When these trusts are formed the weaker individuals and business concerns coming in competition with them are crushed out of existence. The price of the articles which are bought by the trusts from the producers are fixed by the trusts, and they are sold at a price fixed by them. Their freight is hauled first and at a lower rate than that of others; they get cut rates on insurance and employ their labor at their own price; their taxes are assessed according to the elasticity of their consciences, and being without heart or soul the coffers of the Government do not overflow from the bounties which they heap into them.

John D. Rockefeller, jr., in an address on "Trusts," to the students of Brown University, used this metaphor:

> The American Beauty rose can be produced in its splendor and fragrance only by sacrificing the early buds which grow up around it.

This truly illustrates the voracity of the trusts and with perfection exemplifies the manner in which the Standard Oil trust, the Amalgamated Steel trust, the meat trust, and the numerous other trusts, controlling hundreds of millions of dollars in capital, have gorged themselves with spoils taken from the victims of their inordinate rapacity.

In carrying out their nefarious designs they cajole the courts, they attempt to stock legislative halls with their pliant tools, and with their slimy tentacles are reaching out for the Presidential chair.

A little more than one hundred years ago George Washington died, the richest man in America, beloved by his countrymen and honored by all mankind. In our memory Stephen Girard and Peter Cooper were the richest men of their time; but instead of using their millions to convert happiness into squalid misery they entwined the silken cord of love around the hearts of an affectionate people. Their memory is yet revered and their names will be handed down to the latest generations as emblems of true nobility. They lived before the time when the people bowed down to the god of Mammon and poured forth their adulations at the shrine of the bloated bondholder and the multimillion plutocrat.

"Thou shalt have no other God before me" is not written in the decalogue of the trust magnate of this era; but the golden calf holds the most conspicuous place in his sanctum sanctorum.

Assyria was a most powerful kingdom in ancient times, and the wonderful city of Babylon, with her aqueducts and hanging gardens was the most beautiful city in the world; but their profligacy brought destruction to their splendor and a drunken festival ended the empire.

Greece was a democracy. So long as her people developed a love for literature and art, and were attracted by the real pursuit of happiness she shed a halo of glory throughout the world. But in course of time there arose an aristocracy, which, becoming as the trust plutocrat of to-day, inflated by grinding the masses, accumulated vast fortunes and by voluptuousness and riotous living degenerated into effeminacy and the nation went into decay, contaminated by the luxury of its men and the immorality of its women.

Rome and Carthage were founded at about the same time. Their Governments were republican in form. Their lights shone as beacons upon the horizon of nations. Their pomp and splendor and grandeur had never been equaled in the history of the world, but their Pandora box was finally opened and the apple of discord was thrown in as they danced with glee to the harp of joy. Riches, power, magnificence drowned every sense of conservatism and, reveling in luxury and debauchery, they crumbled into the ashes of destruction.

There are no more happy or better contented people to-day than those of France. But let us not forget the French revolution. This sickening catastrophe was caused by the tyranny of wealth in its efforts to tighten its coils around the struggling form of an industrious and liberty-loving people.

These people arose in their might and purged the nation of the human vampires who were sucking their lifeblood and deriding the victims of their merciless spoliation.

Three hundred thousand nobles were living in France at the outbreak of the revolution. These nobles imposed most unjust burdens upon the people, and being upheld by church and state there was no arbitrament to which to appeal except the sword. France was deluged in blood! The execution of King, Queen, nobles, women, and children was so awful as to appall, to horrify, the world! Can we learn a lesson from history? Is patriotism dead in this country? Will a reckoning never come? Believe it not! The day is fast approaching when the American people will no longer submit to the human vultures who are preying upon their vitals! The day of deliverance is dawning and will soon shine in its effulgent glory. It will not bring the torch, the sword, or the guillotine, but the voice of the people, which is the voice of God, will be heard! Public servants will be held to the paths of rectitude; pure men will be put in public places; rigorous laws will be enacted and will be rigidly enforced, and great combinations of wealth for illicit purposes will be prohibited. The cornering and monopolizing of the necessities of life will become a high crime and the miscreants who violate the laws will be condemned to solitary confinement, where the specter of their conscience will rise up to lash them. There must be purity in public life. We have a great Navy and a great Army, but what we need is pure men and pure women—men and women who can overcome great temptations, who will not be led astray by sounding brass and tinkling cymbals. Such men and such women do not often come from the great cities of the world.

The great men of a nation usually come from the humble fireside, the rustic grove, the shady hillside, the murmuring brook, the waving grain, and the loamy furrow. Here, there is no pollution, no intrigue, no infidelity; but men and women are the imprints of the handiwork of the God of Nature.

Cincinnatus was called from his plow to save Rome, and from the humble homes in the rural districts there will rise up those like Cincinnatus who will dislodge these iniquitous trusts from their strongholds and restore our country to her primitive purity.

Three-fifths of the expenses of the Government are paid by agriculture. There are ninety-five laboring men in this country to every five capitalists—there is no class of laborers which is not organized. The great mass of the people are pure in mind and heart, and by properly cooperating they can control the destinies of this nation. No one class of honest citizens should be arrayed against the other—no legitimate enterprise should antagonize any other, but each should work for the good of the other and all for the welfare of the whole—in this way alone can our happiest dream be realized.

When we want to find purity in its pristine beauty, we go to the country. Charity, in all its generous impulses, abounds there. There, each man who lives a correct life is the equal of all his neighbors. There are no castes, no social scale, no highfliers, or degraded debauchees. A man is judged for what he is worth. Each joins in the sorrows of the others, and in sickness, trials, or troubles each man leans upon the strong arm of his neighbor, and a sympathetic chord is touched in each manly heart.

Give us the purity of the country hearthstone in our homes, in our courts, in our legislative halls, in our executive chairs, and our Government will go down, resounding through all the ages as the grandest monument ever erected to the liberties of mankind. Then let the manipulators in stocks and bonds and the gamblers in high finance endeavor to bring on a financial crash, the people who own their homes and those pursuing the peaceful avocations of life will bid defiance, and will rejoice at their emancipation from the thraldom of environments like those with which they are now surrounded. We see the dawn of day in the east, and may God speed the time when the effulgent rays of a noonday sun may beam in their brilliancy over the destinies of a people redeemed from avarice and restored to their love for all that is noble, pure, and good.

Mr. WILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with very great pleasure to the eloquent remarks of the distinguished gentlemen who have just addressed this House, and I find that their utterances have prompted me to express a few thoughts which have been on my mind for some time. My only excuse for presenting these thoughts is, that I am an American citizen and I love my country.

I desire to address my remarks to the first paragraph of the President's message now under discussion.

At the very dawn of our nation's history the citizen was enthroned instead of the ruler. The citizen was made king. Sovereignty was placed in the people and not in governors or Presidents.

This was made possible because of the prevailing contention against arbitrary authority, and this contention is still alive in the breast and brain of every true American battling for the right of the people to govern themselves.

The people are the President; the governor. These are names for their will, their authority, their power, and their agents.

The citizen of no country on earth has so much secured to him as the citizen of this great country.

What he does not possess in State, he has surrendered to acquire greater things in the nation. Nothing can be taken away from him, and there is nothing that he has given up that he can not reclaim; nothing delegated that he can not recall and do himself.

No one has superseded him.

He may rejoice in the proud consciousness that he is the king, the lawmaker, and ruler.

We have drifted so far away from these simple and primary facts of our citizenship that it is desirable and well-nigh imperative to apply the probe of public discussion to them.

One of the duties most binding and one of the privileges most precious to an American citizen is the free discussion of the affairs of his land and country in an orderly, intelligent, and rational manner.

Our foundations were laid in discussion.

Public opinion, which is the final court, makes up its verdict by discussion.

The surest and shortest road to tyranny is by the interdiction of free speech.

Great would be the calamity that would close the minds and voices of our citizens to the fullest and freest discussion of all national and State questions and all Executive actions. The safety of the Republic lies in the fact that every act of the Executive and every act of legislation is sure to be reviewed by the searchlight of unselfish and fearless discussion.

Nothing can be more dangerous to our national liberty and prosperity than an indifferent, careless, and thoughtless acquiescence in existing conditions.

No man has a just claim upon the attention of a thoughtful people who exhibits hostility to the noble institutions of his country or who assails with anarchistic design its chief executives.

In this great country remedies are accomplished not by an assault upon one man, but by persuasion of a majority of the people. No useful purpose is ever served in this country by removing with violence a man who is the choice of a majority. It is the majority we must remove by solid and unanswerable argument.

A silent revolution is thus accomplished; no flying of banners; no bursting of shell; no carnage of battle; no loss of blood, but a fair interchange of thought, a combat of minds, a triumph of reason.

But while the privilege and duty of such discussion is beyond question, all men who discuss our country's affairs must be careful to do so within constitutional limits and in language which a crazy anarchist can not misconstrue.

I have read with great pleasure the opening paragraph of the President's message. I have read it many times. He says:

> No nation has greater resources than ours.

And every American rejoices in the consciousness of this fact. He says:

> And I think it can be truthfully said that the citizens of no nation possess greater energy and industrial ability.

We gladly clasp him by the hand and say: "We agree with you in this, and we are proud that we are citizens under the Stars and Stripes."

But he says further:

> In no nation are the fundamental business conditions sounder than in ours at this very moment; and it is foolish when such is the case for people to hoard money instead of keeping it in sound banks, for it is such hoarding that is the immediate occasion of money stringency. Moreover, as a rule, the business of our people is conducted with honesty and probity, and this applies alike to farms and factories, to railroads and banks, to all our legitimate commercial enterprises.

Mr. Chairman, either our distinguished President is wrong in the multitude of statements he has been making before the American people or this part of the paragraph is foolish optimism.

Mr. Chairman, during the holidays I went back to my home. I met manufacturers, builders, and merchants, and they said to me: "Is there any way you can help us out of our difficulty?" And my talks with them disclosed a financial difficulty of a very serious nature, and I endeavored to assist them through the banks, but without success. The bankers said: "We can give you no assistance; there is a difficulty in our financial system. Our currency affairs are in very bad condition, and we are practically helpless to render aid."

I met men who are conversant with our financial affairs, and I have devoted about two weeks to interviews with the head officials of banking institutions, and my inquiry has been, "What is the trouble, what caused it, and how shall we remedy the conditions?" I have found that some had fine-spun, complicated theories as to the underlying cause of the trouble, but in the final analysis the opinions were practically unanimous that the panic was precipitated by the ill-timed, unwise, and intemperate utterances of our Chief Executive, and that the financial institutions which were not fortified against the storm thus created fell first when attacked. In other words, the banker who was so blind as not to see the necessary national calamity which must inevitably follow an assault upon the very life of our industrial institutions, and therefore did not know his peril, must unquestionably suffer the penalty of this folly.

I have tried not to be hysterical on this question. I have tried to be sane, thoughtful, and deliberate. I have tried to brush aside all prejudice, and I have tried in a simple way, the only way that I can, to deal with this question and designate what, in my opinion, is the cause. My conclusion is, Mr. Chairman, that, after all, the simple proposition is that each one of us has lost confidence in the other. The business man has lost faith in the men with whom he deals. The banker has lost confidence in the business man. A spirit of unrest, indecision, and uncertainty has taken hold upon the people in general. Men entitled to extended credit receive practically none. Why is it?

The friends of the President say you can not blame him because he has simply turned on the light and exhibited the rottenness of our institutions. No, they say, you can not blame him.

A statement has been credited to Baron Rothschild that if the public for the short period of twenty-four hours should lose every confidence in his ability and integrity, he would be bankrupt.

This statement is said to have been made at a time when it was necessary for the rulers of the world to obtain the consent of the great master of finance before entering upon war.

Credit is so delicate a thing that the richest man in the world in those days was absolutely at the mercy of any person with sufficient influence to destroy his reputation for honesty and ability.

The distinction between actual cash and credit is rarely considered.

Business men speak of a cash transaction when they mean that the article sold is to be paid for upon delivery, but certainly it is a transaction only if the payment is made in coin or currency.

Evidently, if the payee receives a check, the transaction is based purely on credit, which is the result of his confidence, first, in the man whose check he receives and, secondly, in the ability of the bank to honor it. Destroy the payee's confidence in either or both of these, and he will accept only cash. Then, and then only, does it become a cash transaction. Ordinarily, however, the business man refers to a credit transaction as one according to which the payment is to be made after a certain time has elapsed, or at some time subsequent to the date of the transaction. Here, of course, a greater amount of confidence is required on the part of the payee or the seller.

Now, let us suppose that by the incendiary speeches of the President the individual's mind becomes filled with forebodings as to the integrity of the persons with whom he has commercial or financial dealings. By a natural mental process he arrives at the conclusion that if those who stand high in the financial world are unworthy of his confidence it will be advisable for him to proceed with the utmost caution in his dealings in general. That form of credit which is dependent upon the greatest confidence, namely, the time allowance for the payment of bills, is curtailed, and if other events of a disquieting nature succeed one another continually, it is not surprising that the lack of confidence should become so acute that he will refuse to avail himself even of those forms of credit usually characterized as cash transactions, namely, acceptance of checks in lieu of cash. It is then that the period of hysteria commences; that the public clamors at the doors of the banks of the country for their money, and that a general financial panic ensues.

If the German Emperor, for example, should see fit to proclaim throughout the length and breadth of his Empire the dishonesty of the leading members of the financial community in Germany, should he resort to a shorter and uglier word and call them "liars;" should he intimate that they were robbing the people; it would be perfectly natural for the German people to lose confidence in the paper commonly called securities, issued over the signature and over the indorsement of those men, and if they should throw these securities on the market for whatever prices they might bring, there would be nothing unnatural about it; on the contrary, it would be entirely in accord with natural laws. Nothing, therefore, has happened in this country that might not have been expected as the result of the procedure of the President.

In reply to the President's argument, I think it can be safely said that the President has not turned on the light, but that he has turned on gas. The people have not been enlightened but stupefied. He has talked too much. He has gone forth to the American people and made them believe that the men who were running all our industrial institutions are dishonest and are not worthy of their confidence and trust, and therefore confidence and trust have been taken from them and disaster has followed. [Applause.]

I have heard no word from the President denying that he said that "if he had brought on the panic, he was glad of it, as it was coming on anyway," or words to that effect; but we have abundant and reliable authority that he did say it. It certainly was a declaration evidencing an unsafe state of mind. It is like the excuse of a doctor who enters a sick room and says, "I know that the patient is going to die some time, and therefore I will thrust the knife into his heart and get rid of him at once."

I say, Mr. Chairman, that what we need to-day is not so much the spirit of condemnation, to crush them down and destroy and kill, but what we need is the spirit of preservation, to build up and solidify and make firm and true. Why, cheers do a thousand times more good than complaints.

While we emphatically condemn all combinations of capital which have for their main purpose restraint of trade and oppression we must not forget (to quote from a distinguished author) that "manufacture and commerce are tremendous instruments of civilization, and the accumulation of wealth is the multiplication of man's powers of noble conquest. It is the measure of possibilities in subduing the lands and seas, in the institutions of the state, in education and the church, in the development of the earth's resources and the application of them to the varied demands of mankind. It is a prime equation, when properly used, of civilization and the millennium.

In these times an association of business men stands for something more than the money-getting interest of a great community. It has to do with the expenditures of moneys as well, in the interests of all the people, in sanitation, education, and all forms of thrift and morals. It perhaps is one of the most public-spirited institutions in all the land. Its scope is so wide that it is unembarrassed by any public subject into which one's thought and discussion may range—for its field is the world. For in these days manufacture and commerce are the patron saints of philosophy, art, and letters; of war, peace, and religion; of invention, discovery, and politics. Love of money is the root of all evil; but lawful money-making, the right use of money, and the wisdom of the money-makers are the roots of all practical good, or at least the practical application of all good.

The extent to which manufacture has widened and penetrated all human interests from the plow to the altar reveals the pace of modern thought. It is the way the century has been thinking and moving. It is the faith of the new man pushing on and pushing out. It is irresistible. I suppose the first movements of migration and trade were inspired by physical consideration exclusively. It was to get pasturage for flocks and to find food more abundant. But now civilization is the great goal of manufacture and trade. All forms of business volunteer their offerings to discovery, to science, to the state. We have a new concept, broad, worthy, in which no man is to live for himself. We are to discover not trade alone, but duty and opportunity and the signs of God that shall indicate our place and part in the mighty struggle to emancipate this world and give it in every part liberty.

Legislate all you choose, you never can make the great men do small things or the small ones do great things. Great men will make small things great and you can not stop it, and you can not by all the laws of the Solons and Numas of the earth make a small man do a great thing. Every man will work in his own order. If we get misplaced, legislation will not place us. We have got to work out our own salvation.

This new doctrine that you can legislate unsuccessful men into success is a piece of imbecility that does injustice to our twentieth century. The man who whines that he has no chance because other men have got the trade can not be helped by law. There will be nothing of him that is not in him nor for him that he does not do for himself.

When a new Cunarder is built we do not begin a protest and investigate because she is too big for the channel of our harbor or because she will bring the passengers of five great ships across the seas and make tramps of the old-time greyhounds and restrain their trade. We dig our channel deeper and build our docks longer and say "Come on! We will dig as deep water as you can draw, and we will float you lengthwise of the North River before we will surrender to anything that man can put upon the ocean!"

We should dig our channels deep for our trade, our manufactures, and inventions, and man should multiply himself a hundredfold for the new and startling capacity demanded by the new age. It is our business to make way for him, to join forces with him, and to welcome him with all of his powers of brain and wealth, for he is working out the gigantic proportions of a new and last civilization.

A lawmaking, court-controlling Executive, a government by commissions, a personal construction of the Constitution, is not a republic.

The trial of business corporations in courts of the Administration by a prosecuting Administration, the arraignment of citizens and their business by name in a condemnatory way, the characterizing of private citizens offensively, and the commenting adversely upon men under indictment waiting trial, unseemly quarrels with the representatives of our highest official positions before an astonished civilized world, and gratuitous attacks upon citizens for their personal opinions and teachings are so opposed to all our dignified traditions and such a menace to our boasted freedom as to justify universal condemnation.

We do not want a Chief Executive going up and down the country condemning and striking everything that shows its head. What we do want is a man performing his duties with dignity, conservatism, and with power and with the influence of all sane men behind him.

It has been said that our President is sincere. He may be, but we want him a sensible President along with his sincerity. When a cook comes to me with a recommendation that she is sincere, I want to know also that she knows how to cook. [Applause.] She may be sincere, but incompetent; and so, what we want is a man in the White House who, when the sum total of his life is made up, has something more than sincerity to commend him. Why, it is elementary that the more sincerely you believe a falsehood the more disastrous it is to you. So mere sincerity does not help; it may be a very dangerous thing. If a schemer comes to you with some sort of a fake gold mine and shows you the golden road to prosperity and a million dollars, if you believe him, and you are so sincere in your belief that you embark every dollar you have in the world in the scheme, and the whole thing goes up in smoke, then you have lost everything; whereas if you had mingled caution with your sincerity, you would not have fared so badly.

Mr. Chairman, in these powerful positions in our nation, we need to-day men who are safe, sane, sensible, conservative, courageous, and true. I stand here to-day to say that many of these qualifications are not possessed by the present occupant of the White House. And I declare that it is my profound conviction that this panic of to-day is due to his lack of sound business sense and his failure to duly appreciate the true condition of our nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I respectfully call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to two articles which appeared in the November and December numbers of the American Business Man, which present in a forceful and vigorous manner the matter now under discussion, and I think it is fair to say disclose the state of mind of the business man in this nation to-day. They are as follows:

THE "SQUARE DEAL," AND DO WE GET IT?

It is generally unjust to blame a panic upon a President, for panics are usually traceable to crop failures or to the uncurbed excesses of the gambling mania or to other conditions beyond the control of a President or his Administration.

But the present panicky feeling which is paralyzing the industries of the country is not due to speculative excesses, else it would have reached its climax nine months ago, when Wall street had its attack of colic. It is not at all due to crop failures, but exists in spite of splendid crops in almost every section of the country.

It is due entirely to the destruction of popular confidence in the honesty and soundness of the fundamental enterprises of the nation, and this destruction of confidence can be traced mainly, if not wholly, to the public utterances of Theodore Roosevelt.

Therefore we say that this present condition of panic, this present cessation of manufacturing, this present dullness of merchandizing, this present paralysis of banking, is properly chargeable to Theodore Roosevelt—to his policy of openly, blatantly denouncing business institutions, and to his practice of publicly wreaking personal vengeance on unfavored individuals.

No one, anywhere, will argue that every kind of business, everywhere, is wrong or rotten or dishonest. No one will cry out that every millionaire is a thief and a scoundrel. Yet conditions could hardly be worse if this were the popular hue and cry. And the whole cause of it all is that Theodore Roosevelt, in his own inflammatory way, has succeeded in upsetting the equilibrium of public confidence, so that the people, everywhere, unable to distinguish the good from the bad, have begun to be convinced that all corporations, banks, railroads, and big business enterprises are unsound and untrustworthy, and have lost their confidence in the fundamental enterprises upon which the business of the nation rests.

We do not question the sincerity of the President. We only deplore his lack of mental balance which is evidenced when he jumps at the conclusion that, since some things are bad, all things must be bad. We only deplore his lack of judgment in exploiting his inmost thoughts to an excitable public before he has had time to mature them in his own mind. We only deplore his ruthlessness in appropriating the powers of the Department of Justice to his own purposes and upsetting the coordinate branches of government which the Constitution was meant to guarantee to us. We only deplore his abortion of the high power with which he is intrusted to petty personal ends.

For it is not enough that a President be sincere. He should be sensible. He should be closemouthed. He should be self-controlled. He should be conservative. Theodore Roosevelt is none of these.

And whatever have been the actuating motives, it can not be denied that the attacks of the big stick have not been attacks on speculation. They have been attacks on industry.

No matter how they have been aimed, they have hurt the gambler less than they have hurt the working business man.

They have not curbed the evils of overcapitalization, but they have shredded and shriveled that very warp and woof of our business fabric—public confidence.

They have not succeeded in making our earnings more safe from the hands of the looter, but they have made it necessary for the railroads to lay off their men by the thousand, for banks to curtail their loans that are the lifeblood of trade, and for businesses everywhere to pause with bated breaths while the fate of a million salaried employees and workingmen trembles in the balance.

Under the guise of punishing wrongdoers Theodore Roosevelt has inflamed the public mind into a semisocialism. By his public utterances he has worked up a spirit of unrest and distrust which can produce no good, but only disaster.

He has forgotten the dignity of his position; he has lost sight of his sworn responsibilites in a mad scramble to tear down the business of the nation, which it is his plain duty, instead, to protect.

It is no excuse to argue that there are evils to be corrected and dishonest men to be punished.

There is no possible excuse for the present destruction of public confidence at a time when, in the lap of plenty, we should be reaping the rich rewards of our patient toil. There is no possible excuse for the vengeance and destruction which is being visited on foremost American business enterprises.

That there are evils, that there are dishonest men, no one will deny. It could scarcely be otherwise.

But the correction of evil and the punishment of dishonesty are not things to be flaunted in the public eye; are not cases to be tried by the nation's Executive through the public press; are not properly the public themes of a President's political activity.

The Government is provided with a Department of Justice, which includes machinery for the discovery of evils, for the apprehension of criminals, for the collection of evidence, and for fair and impartial trials to all.

The orderly processes of law need no reenforcement by inflammatory appeals to the multitude. And a President of the United States has every facility for starting the wheels of justice without first appealing to the populace to condemn men and institutions in advance of the collection of evidence against them.

It is Theodore Roosevelt's present policy that brands him a dangerous, destructive politician at the nation's head at a time when there is crying need for a conservative, constructive statesman.

The "big stick" is no weapon for a President. Much less, then, personal vilification and blatant abuse!

The method of Theodore Roosevelt is the method of the patent-medicine faker. He shouts our ears full of high-sounding phrases, and by his mannerisms and misleading emphases causes us to assume things which are not true and forces us into false conclusions.

His pet phrase has been "the square deal."

But the square deal dates back before Roosevelt. It is the theme of our Constitution. It was contemplated by John Hancock. It was an active principle in the time of Jefferson. It is an established institution of the United States. It is the whole object of our form of government, and depends not on any arm of the Government, but upon the Government as a whole. It depends upon the Federal courts and upon the Attorney-General. It depends on the Senate and on the House of Representatives. It depends upon the governmental Departments and upon the Cabinet. And, after all, it depends only slightly on the President himself.

Yet, with a blare of trumpets, Theodore Roosevelt would have us believe that he discovered this new golden rule, and that now, and for the first time, it will be put into active practice.

The square deal, indeed!

Is it the square deal when a President of the United States incites the public into a clamor that winds up in panic? Is it the square deal when a President takes cases out of the courts and tries them from the rear platform of his train? Is it the square deal when a President swings and smashes his big stick and tears down industries that took years of patient effort to build up? Is it the square deal when a President uses his high position for personal vituperation and vilification?

Did that steamboat captain who was discharged by telegraph at the instigation of the President, and who was later at a court of law found guiltless, did he get the square deal?

Does the workingman who is thrown out of his job because of dull times which follow this Presidential tirade and talk, does this workingman get the square deal?

Is it a square deal for his employer?

And the merchant, the clerk, the superintendent, the bookkeeper, the jobber, the traveling man—every man in business who is made to suffer "along with the guilty"—is theirs the square deal?

Who gets the square deal? The trust does not get it, when its property is confiscated because of a bloodless crime. The railroad does not get it when it is fined $5,000 for a 45-cent rebate. The bank does not get it when the Presidential destruction of public confidence threatens its safety. The manufacturer, the merchant does not get it. The workingman does not get it. And this in a country where without the interference of the President the square deal would be a mechanical, an automatic fact!

If "my policies" are permitted to continue, the time is now in sight when the acute issue will be the Square Deal v. the Square Meal.

THE TOILERS AND THE SPOILER.

Every man who ever earned a dollar; every man who, by toil and patient effort, has built up a business or won for himself a responsible position; every man who has money in the bank or a home to live in; every man in business, whether he be employer or employee, should take heed. For we face a national danger that threatens to stop our earnings and wipe out our savings; that threatens to cut off our weekly pay envelopes; that threatens to throw us into a chaos of hard times.

It is the danger of the Big Stick.

We live in a splendidly prosperous country. But our prosperity was not gained in a night. It was earned by long years of patient effort. It was won by decades of struggle for world markets. It was brought about through the concerted energy of the farmer, the oil man, the steel man, the manufacturer, the miner, the merchant. It was made possible largely by the railroads.

Now the spoiler is abroad in this land of toilers. The Big Stick is his weapon. And his purpose is not to build up, but to tear down. Not to correct and to help, but to wreak vengeance, and to destroy.

We have not always been a rich or a prosperous nation. The time was, not many years ago, when we were poor—very poor. The time was when our national enterprise was not running smoothly; when, instead of having an annual profit, we were draining our own resources to pay our mere living expenses. Those were the days when individual successes were difficult and rare; when a fortune of $50,000 was a fortune, indeed.

And now?

And now, that we are basking in the sunshine of plenty, we are asked to applaud the crack of the Big Stick as it cripples a railroad. We are asked to howl our approval at the sight of a trust in distress. Now, that we have gained a firm footing in finance, we are commanded to clap our hands in glee at a smashing blow intended to paralyze our whole system of business nerves.

It is not a Wall street peril that we discuss. It is a business peril. It is a peril which hovers over the national banks of the Dakotas and makes it hard for the farmers to borrow money on their wheat. It is a peril which menaces the steel industries of Pennsylvania. It is a peril which threatens the output of every factory, the sales of every store, the income of every man in business, great or small.

For the Big Stick chooses as its targets those fundamental enterprises which are the foundation stones of every business everywhere.

When it threatens the railroads it threatens you. When it threatens the financial security of the country it threatens your prosperity, your success, your job. When it threatens to dissolve a trust and confiscate a fortune it threatens, too, to dissolve your means of livelihood and confiscate your savings.

It is no argument to say that there are evils to be corrected.

There are.

But the Big Stick seeks not to correct. It seeks to destroy.

Does your roof leak? Tear down the house! Have you a dishonest bookkeeper? Discharge every employee! Are you overstocked? Burn your store! That is not the way to succeed in business. That is not the correction of evil—it is destruction. But that is the policy which actuates the Big Stick.

Has a trust been guilty of an unfair act? Forget the fact that that trust has won a world market that pours us in a mint of money. Forget the fact that in a thousand ways that trust performs a useful service. Forget the fact that its life is the life of a thousand enterprises that it carries and nurses and feeds. Forget everything! Dissolve it! Take away its charter! Kill it! Destroy it!

That is the argument of the Big Stick.

Is there a railroad caught in some petty larceny? Tear up its tracks! Burn its ties! No matter that with the fates of that railroad will rise and fall the fates of a hundred communities, a thousand factories, and ten thousand farms! Paralyze it! Smash it! Destroy it!

Is there a packer who needs the stern hand of some city official to make him clean up his killing-room floor? Ah! It is a national issue! Publish the filth! Ruin his hard-earned foreign market! Nauseate the whole human race! Swing the Big Stick and destroy!

Is there a man who dares to differ? Brand him a faker! Call him a liar! Besmut him! Befoul him! Disgrace him! Destroy him!

The danger that imperils us, this danger of the Big Stick, is that it appeals to the credulity that is in us. It whispers suspicions to us. It sows the seed of unrest. It poisons our minds with polite anarchy and socialism. It is recommended as a corrector of evil, when, in reality, it is but a destroyer of everything. It presents itself as the chastening rod of a dutiful parent, when it is but the weapon of a wild man seeking popular notoriety.

"There are persons who constantly clamor. They complain of oppression, speculation, and the pernicious influence of accumulated wealth. They cry out loudly against all banks and corporations and all means by which small capitals become united in order to produce important and beneficial results. They carry on mad hostility against all established institutions. They would choke the fountain of industry and dry all the streams. In a country of unbounded liberty they clamor against oppression. In a country of perfect equality they would move heaven and earth against privilege and monopoly. In a country where property is more evenly divided than anywhere else they rend the air shouting agrarian doctrines. In a country where the wages of labor are high beyond parallel they would teach the laborer that he is but an oppressed slave."

Does this not sound as if it might have been written yesterday? Does not the germ of truth it contains seem to apply peculiarly, and only, to conditions which confront us to-day?

It is an extract from a public speech of Daniel Webster, delivered in the United States Senate in 1838.

Who is it that incites the people to clamor?

Is it the day laborer, the workman in the factory, on the farm, in the mine? No. He is content. His clamor is no louder than might reasonably be expected in any ordinary times. He is not the man who urges the Big Stick onward in its skull-crashing mission.

Is it the manufacturer, the merchant, the banker? Ah, no! His sigh is to be left in peace to enjoy the prosperity that his efforts have earned.

Is it the oil man, the steel man, the packer, the railroad? Hardly! The whole present clamor is the inspiration of the politician. Not the ward heeler, not the political boss, but the master politician himself.

The present unrest is inspired by the public utterances of the President of the land.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I feel impelled to say: "Let our distinguished President study Washington's farewell address as a caution against the misuse of the Constitution; study Lincoln's mighty faith and superb patience and his charity for all; study McKinley's philosophical, practical, sound sense and give the people a rest. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is any other member of the committee who desires to speak. There does not seem to be anybody rising from his seat to take the floor. Therefore I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OVERSTREET, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House resolution 43, providing for the distribution of the President's message, and had come to no resolution thereon.

JUVENILE COURT, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by Judge William H. DeLacy of the first year's operations of the juvenile court in and for the District of Columbia.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 6, 1908.

The message, with accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

GUANICA CENTRAL AND MUNICIPALITY OF CAYEY, PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with section 32 of an act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, I transmit herewith certified copies of franchises, granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to Guanica Central and to the municipality of Cayey.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 7, 1908.

The message, with accompanying documents, was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES, SIXTIETH CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLERK'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 4, 1907.

SIR: I have the honor to lay before the House of Representatives a list of contests for seats in the House of Representatives for the Sixtieth Congress of the United States, notices of which have been filed in the office of the Clerk of the House, and also transmit therewith all original testimony, papers, and documents relating thereto, as follows:

No. 3—State of Illinois.—Fifth District, Eighth District.

No. 1—State of South Carolina.—First District, Second District, Seventh District.

No. 2—Territory of New Mexico.

The Clerk has opened and printed the testimony in all of the above cases, excepting in the case of Anthony Michalek and Adolph J. Sabath, of the Fifth Illinois District, in which case testimony having been taken by the contestant only, and was not delivered to this office until October 3, 1907, and for this reason was not opened or printed; and also in the case of Stanley H. Kunz and Charles McGavin, of the Eighth Illinois District, wherein both the contestant and the contestee agreed to and abide by the result of a recount of the actual ballots cast, and which showed that Charles McGavin was duly elected.

In compliance with the act approved March 2, 1897, entitled "An act relating to contested elections," such portions of the testimony in the above cases as the parties in interest agreed upon or as seemed proper to the Clerk, except as above noted, after giving the requisite notices, have been printed and indexed, together with the notices of contest and the answers thereto, and such portions of the testimony as were not printed with the original papers have been sealed up and are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections.

Two copies of the printed testimony in each case have been mailed to the contestant and the same number to the contestee. The law in reference to the briefs of both the contestant and contestee in each case has been complied with as far as possible upon receipt by the Clerk of said briefs.

So far as the briefs have been furnished to the Clerk, they are ready to be laid before the Committee on Elections upon the order of the House, together with a tabulated statement, which has been prepared by the Clerk, showing the number of pages of testimony and the present status of each contested-election case and all papers in connection therewith.

Very respectfully,

A. MCDOWELL,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair assigns these cases to the respective committees according to the memorandum on the first page, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Committee on Elections No. 1, State of South Carolina, First District, Second District, Seventh District.

To Committee on Elections No. 2, Territory of New Mexico.

To Committee on Elections No. 3, State of Illinois, Fifth District, Eighth District.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MEYER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I do not see in the House at this moment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws. I have had some consultation with him, and he tells me that the Criminal Code has been reported by that committee and will be in print and ready for consideration to-morrow morning, and he is quite desirous that consideration of it be had at that time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to call up that bill to-morrow immediately after the disposition of the business upon the Speaker's table, and that it be in order for the day, the House to make such disposition of it as it desires after that; or it may go on as unfinished business.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I understand that this debate we have had on the President's message will just simply be suspended until we get through with the other thing.

Mr. PAYNE. We have not disposed of the resolution, and it will be necessary to go into the Committee of the Whole again whenever there is an opportunity in the House, which I think will occur before a great while.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to know a little more about what that is before we assign a particular date, and I object.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting his report for the year 1907—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting detailed statement of expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, and estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908—to the Committee on Agriculture.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11331) to authorize the Baltimore and Ohio and Chicago Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Grand Calumet River in the town of Gary, Ind., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 18), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9121) to authorize a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 21), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, adverse reports were delivered to the Clerk, and laid on the table, as follows:

Mr. HASKINS, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5354) for the relief of the Columbia National Bank, of Columbia, Pa., reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 7), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6450) for the relief of William Bushby, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 8), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7833) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of the St. Louis Hay and Grain Company, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 9), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10383) for the relief of the heirs of Edmund Wolf, reported the same adversely, accompanied by a report (No. 10), which said bill and report were laid on the table.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 8, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BRIDGE ACROSS SNAKE RIVER, WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to explain it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and is in the usual form of these bills providing for the construction of dams in accordance with a bill which we passed some time ago. It is a unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It provides for a dam where?

Mr. JONES of Washington. On the Snake River in the State of Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have some information on that matter which will call upon me to object until I can look into it further. I shall object at present.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PEARRE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill (H. R. 10205) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the rule the Committee on Military Affairs can change the reference of this bill by indorsing it and placing it in the basket. But since it is now before the House, there is no objection to its taking this course. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER IN THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 251) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I understand this bill has been reported by the committee?

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is reported unanimously from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARTHOLDT, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CODIFICATION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred the resolution No. 121, have had the same under consideration, and in lieu thereof report the following resolution:

"Resolved, That during this session a motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States shall have the privilege belonging to the similar motion when applied to bills reported from committees having leave to report at any time: And provided further, That there shall be not to exceed four hours of general debate on the said bill, after which it shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule."

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, before I explain the rule I would be glad to know whether there is any disposition on the other side of the House to discuss it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us proceed in the usual way. I want to say a word or two and my colleague on the committee will want to say something.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the previous question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have a right to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. After the previous question is ordered.

The SPEAKER. After the previous question is ordered there will be twenty minutes on each side.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill referred to in the rule is a bill to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States. Members of the House will recollect that some ten years ago—to be exact, in 1897—a commission was appointed to codify the laws of the United States. In the first place, it was appointed to codify merely the penal laws of the United States, but its jurisdiction and duties from time to time were extended, until finally it was authorized to present a complete code, revising all the laws of the United States.

In the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1906 Congress abolished the commission and ordered that its report be made not later than the 15th of December of that year, and its report was then made. That report covered 1,900 pages and embraced 9,000 sections. It was apparent, of course, that in the ordinary course of business the House could with difficulty deal with such a report, and a joint committee of the House and Senate, consisting of five members from each body, was appointed, whose duty it was to examine, consider, and submit to Congress recommendations upon the revision and codification of laws prepared by the statutory revision commission. Now, that joint commission, acting during the vacation, and acting with a great deal of industry and zeal, as I understand, presents to the House to-day this bill, which codifies, revises, and amends the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is that a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. DALZELL. I so understand. This bill covers 189 pages and includes 342 sections. It is, under the rules of the House, properly on the House Calendar. It is manifest that, considered under the rules of the House as on the House Calendar, no such opportunity for debate will be afforded as ought to be afforded in the consideration of so important a bill, covering so large a territory. The Committee on Rules, therefore, suggest that instead of considering the bill in the House it be considered in the Committee of the Whole House under the ordinary rules applying to the consideration of bills in that committee. Not to exceed four hours are allowed for general debate, an allowance that, unless I am misinformed, probably was not demanded by the parties in interest; but following the general debate comes debate under the five-minute rule, when Members of the House will have opportunity to debate all the amendments and suggestions of this very important bill. In addition to that the rule provides that the House may at any time that it sees fit go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill. In this way it does not become unfinished business so as to interfere with other business that the House may want to consider from time to time, but becomes subject entirely to the control of the House. The House can go into the Committee of the Whole at any time, or refuse to go into the committee at any time to consider this bill. The rule, in other words, is intended to furnish Members of the House abundant facilities and time for debate and to furnish the House itself the opportunity to deal with the bill from time to time as it may see fit. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. It has nothing to do with this particular proposition.

Mr. DALZELL. Then it will not come out of my time. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, if the gentleman does not wish to yield——

Mr. DALZELL. But I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not yield unless he does it with perfect good nature.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield to the gentleman with perfect good nature as much time as he wants out of what I have left.

Mr. MANN. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman understands that to-morrow is the day set apart for the drawing of rooms in the office building, and that the committee in charge of the plans have sent out an invitation to the members of the House to go through the office building to-day so that they might be better prepared to exercise a choice to-morrow. I suppose that a motion will be made immediately upon the adoption of this rule to go into the Committee of the Whole upon this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. That is true.

Mr. MANN. If the bill is to be read for the first time—and of course that can be dispensed with only by unanimous consent—that would probably occupy most of the afternoon. Personally I would be very loath to see actual consideration of the bill or to have made to-day even the speech of the gentleman who is to explain the bill. Members of the House ought to hear the explanation of the bill and they ought to have the opportunity to be out of the House this afternoon. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. DALZELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. DALZELL. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Suppose this rule is adopted, what effect will it have on the general order of business, particularly the sixth provision, the morning hour for the consideration of bills called up by committees?

Mr. DALZELL. None at all.

Mr. HEPBURN. I suppose that any Member by single objection ordinarily can continue the House in that order until that sixth provision is reached. Suppose this is adopted, will it take precedence in any way of the seventh provision, namely, motions to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. DALZELL. This will enable the chairman of this committee at any time to make a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill, which motion the House can vote up or down, as it sees fit.

Mr. HEPBURN. It would prevent the operation of the rule as it now is where the regular order is demanded, compelling the Speaker to go on until we reach the sixth proposition?

Mr. DALZELL. If the motion were made by the chairman of the committee prior to reaching that order of business, or at any time, indeed, the House would have to pass on that motion, to either vote it up or down.

Mr. HEPBURN. May it not be possible if this rule should be adopted that this bill will linger during the whole session, and that it can be used as a buffer on all occasions?

Mr. DALZELL. The very purpose of the rule is to avoid that. If this bill were to come up on the House Calendar on the call of committees it would be unfinished business until disposed of, and the consequence would be that it would be a buffer as against all other business on the House Calendar.

Mr. HEPBURN. Ought there not to be a limitation as to time that this rule should operate, say for thirty or sixty days, so as to compel diligence on the part of the committee to get through with this business?

Mr. DALZELL. That depends entirely on the members of the Committee of the Whole House. They can close debate whenever they see fit. The House can refuse to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill if the House is tired of considering it. My own impression is that the bill will be disposed of within a comparatively short time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, as one of the members of the Committee on Rules I have no objection to the passage of this rule. It seems to me that we ought to get rid of the work of this Commission that has been going on now for over ten years. The matter is entirely nonpartisan in every way. The subject-matter of the bill H. R. 11701, which is dealt with by the rule, is the product of the unanimous action of the committee, Democrats and Republicans. This rule does not make this bill a privileged matter to come up whenever anybody chooses. It merely provides that a motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill shall have the same privilege that belongs to a similar motion from any committee having that privilege under the rule. In other words, there shall be the privilege to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole, but it requires each time an affirmative vote of a majority of the House to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill.

Four hours of general debate is fixed. I understood that the Democratic member of the committee had spoken only for one hour upon our side, but we got two, lest there might be others desiring to talk. The rule does not restrict or limit in any way the power of amendment under the five-minute rule, nor does it restrict in any way debate under the five-minute rule.

My colleague upon the committee differs with me in this matter, and reserving the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker, I shall now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I am unable to arrive at the conclusion reached by my colleague upon the Committee on Rules. I am opposed to this rule, and I am opposed to the time of bringing it forward, and to the time of its adoption, if it is to be adopted now.

There has just been laid upon our desks, or really not laid upon our desks but made available in the document room, the large publication which deals with this subject-matter. I doubt whether a single Member of the House outside of those who compose the Joint Commission has read this bill of nearly 200 pages, or has had any opportunity to read it. The matter is a very important one. There is no question about that. I am not raising any question either as to the Commission having done its work faithfully and well. Of course, I can not know anything about that, neither can anybody else off of the Commission know, because nobody has had the time or opportunity to learn. Neither am I opposed to the consideration of this measure. What I am opposed to is the adoption of a rule for its consideration before the ink is dry upon the document, before there is any opportunity for anybody to know what is in it, or what changes have been made in the law. Now, I understand it to be—and I may be in error about it, because no one has had an opportunity to inform himself, that is, no one off the Commission—I understand this to be, in a good many respects, a rewriting of the criminal law of the United States. I understand that it contains in a good many particulars additions to and changes in the body of that law.

What I am objecting to is the hot haste with which this rule is brought forward and is to be rushed through. If there ought to be a rule at all, the rule ought to be proposed at a later day—not necessarily a late day—after this print has been available for some time, a reasonable time, for the information of the Members of the House.

Then I object to this rule for another reason. The rule is intended to accomplish something. It is not a mere scratch upon paper—not a mere formality. It is designed to give to this bill a status which other bills have not, and which will not be given to other bills, unless it suits the purpose of gentlemen who control legislation in this House. This is an important bill, a subject that ought to have been disposed of long ago. It ought to be disposed of as speedily as it may be with propriety, and with a full understanding of what we are doing. That is one proposition; it is another proposition to put this bill of immense dimensions in a position of advantage as to precedence as compared with every other bill introduced in this House, except alone the bills reported from Appropriations Committees and conference reports, those classed as privileged measures.

Is this the only subject of vast importance with which we have to deal, that it is to be made in order to move to take up this measure at any time and to continue its consideration for any length of time, no matter what the effect may be upon other proposed legislation? Whether that be within the scope of the purposes of all who favor this rule, it is not for me to say. As to some, I do not believe that it is; but that the adoption of this rule does put it within the power of those who control matters in the House to use this bill as a "buffer" through the entire session I do affirm.

Under this rule this bill may be utilized whenever it is designed to keep back anything else. Of that there can be no question. If that be the purpose, the rule will accomplish it well. If that purpose be not accomplished after the adoption of this rule, it will be because a majority see fit not to use the power which this rule will give them.

I need not enumerate here the subjects of vast importance that ought to have the consideration of this House. I might mention the subject of currency regulation, if you please; or take measures dealing with the revenue; or bills designed to correct any abuse or to promote any reform. No matter how pressing the need may be for the legislation, they may be made to wait, and may be strangled and smothered by those in control of this House by simply availing themselves of the power to strangle and to kill which the adoption of this resolution will give.

Now there is no disposition in this House to prevent consideration of this measure; there certainly is none on my part. I sympathize with the desire of the gentlemen who worked upon this Commission to have their work passed upon. I would be glad to see a good revision, a good codification of the laws; but I am opposed to making this thing—this enormous bill—such a creature of privilege that under a special rule, at the option of the majority, at any time, it can be made the means of preventing the consideration of any measure except the necessary appropriation bills, which have a similar right of way.

Take one of your appropriation bills, if you please. You can not go into Committee of the Whole for consideration of that if a majority does not sustain the motion to go into Committee of the Whole. The supply bills to furnish the means to carry on the Government in its various operations have no more privilege than this bill, if this rule be adopted. Unless the majority of this House sustain the motion, you can not go into Committee of the Whole to consider an appropriation bill, and the same thing precisely is true in reference to this bill under this rule.

Now, the temptation will be to use this as a buffer, because it is a well-known fact, I think—at least I am talking upon the assumption that it is a fact—that gentlemen upon that side propose to hasten this session to its close and to deal with just as few important questions as possible to evade just as many as possible, and this rule will furnish them a handy means of carrying out their purpose. Whether it be consciously or unconsciously, it matters not, but if we help to pass the rule we will be furnishing the other side every opportunity to block other legislation with this bill. It is not necessary to adopt this rule in order that this bill may be considered. It is not necessary that it be given a precedence which no other bill except an appropriation bill has. Let you or I or anyone else introduce a resolution here giving the like precedence to any important bill to which the majority of this House may be opposed, with which the majority of this House does not care to deal, or to which they do not care to give a chance of consideration, and that resolution will be as so much waste paper when it goes before the Committee on Rules.

You and I and other Members may have measures; there are, in fact, many measures pending which, according to the judgment of many Members of this House, ought to have consideration, but which we know will never get it; and by voting for this rule we shall be helping to bar the way to the opportunity to secure consideration for them; we shall be furnishing our brethren on the other side the excuse for denying that consideration. Whenever something presses, or whenever there is an unhappy half hour in prospect which the gentlemen upon the other side would like to turn into an hour of ease and pleasure, it will only be necessary to recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], chairman of this Committee on Revision, or somebody else, to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of this bill. Then a majority can take us into Committee of the Whole upon this favored bill, and your other measures, no matter how meritorious, no matter how pressing, no matter how much you would like to have them considered, are to be denied consideration, by virtue of the adoption of this rule which we are now asked to adopt. I think it ought to be defeated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is one of the minority members of the committee.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, there has been, from time to time, considerable criticism expressed in regard to the Commission that was appointed to codify the laws, and that criticism became so acute that when I undertook to get a further extension of power for that Commission I was met by the statement that unless a limit was put upon its labors there would be no passage of the resolution desired. I then stated to the House that I should move to abolish that Commission at the next session of Congress. That promise was kept, and the Commission made its final report and was abolished.

Since that report was made the House Committee on Revision of the Laws has been actively engaged in considering the report, and at the end of the last Congress there was appointed a joint committee consisting of five Senators and five Members of the House that had under consideration this report, and the House Members of this joint committee have reported the bill that this rule pertains to.

Now, there have been some statements made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] as to the parliamentary status established by this rule, which if accurate might be important; but unfortunately they are not accurate. The effect of this rule is to give this bill the same standing as any bill reported from a committee having leave to report at any time, and no other status.

For instance, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs could, if he was recognized by the Speaker, move to go into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of a bill from that committee, and it would then be for the House to vote yea or nay on that motion. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors—any of the committees that have a right to report at any time—can under the rules now make such a motion, and it would be in order.

The effect of this proposed rule is simply to authorize the chairman of this committee to call up this bill and to move to go into the Committee of the Whole for its consideration. By going into the Committee of the Whole House we give a fuller opportunity to the membership of this body to consider and discuss the bill. There is no desire on the part of any member of that committee to have any gag rule applied at any stage in the consideration of the bill. They realize that this work is one of extreme importance; that the wisdom of no limited number of men can finally determine the matters which we have had to consider, and we want and invite the honest, intelligent criticism of every Member of this House in considering this bill. We hope Members will take the trouble to study the bill. Another objection is made that because there has been no study of the bill heretofore it should not be brought up at this time. In reply to that, I wish to say that if we should wait until the membership of this body voluntarily studied a bill of this kind before it was brought up for legislation we should wait until doomsday, and everybody knows it.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Is there any limitation upon the consideration of this bill under this rule?

Mr. SHERLEY. None; and the very thing that the gentleman ought to want least is a limitation. The gentleman would not want a bill of this magnitude, affecting all the penal laws of the United States, brought in here with a time limit, so that when we got half through with the consideration of it it could then be rushed through the House without further consideration.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. That, in my opinion, is a correct statement, and I simply wanted to know whether we were required within a limited time to vote upon this measure.

Mr. SHERLEY. By no means. It would be monstrous to put a limitation upon it. The committee hope to proceed with rapidity.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. How many pages are there in it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. One hundred and eighty-nine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have just been informed that there are 189 pages in the bill; but I want to say, for the benefit of the House, in order that they may not be terrified by imaginary conditions surrounding this bill, that the action of the committee has been unanimous. It represents the views of the Senate members and the House members, and the effort of the committee has been not to create new laws, not to undertake to usurp jurisdiction from other committees by the opportunity here presented, but simply to take the penal laws of the country and put them into such form as would make them more readily intelligible and more easy to find. To-day you have to look to a dozen sources to find what the law of the United States is. It was our desire to simplify and codify, but in no sense to create new law, and I can say on behalf of the committee that that purpose has been scrupulously followed and that this bill contains practically no new law. Not only is that true, but in printing this bill the committee has gone further than ever has been gone before in order to give complete information to the Members of the House. Not only do we print the bill we propose to pass so as to designate what is new matter and what is rearranged matter, but we print also the existing law, so a man at a glance can see by comparison what has been done by the committee. We ask that the House shall give this work, upon which the committee has worked so diligently, appropriate consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], a member of the committee.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what has already been said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] I wish to emphasize the fact that in considering the importance of this bill we must take into consideration the fact that it affects every court in the United States, every lawyer practicing before those courts, and every individual citizen in the entire country. It is one of those measures that is not local in its character.

The committee in considering this bill has been delayed from time to time, from term to term, and the bill must be considered at some time if it is ever to be considered at all. This is an opportune time. There can be no more propitious time than the present. We have as much time now as we ever shall have, and I insist on its present consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, also a member of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the joint committee I merely desire to say that I am heartily in favor of the adoption of this rule. I think the argument made that it would be wrong to put it in the power of the majority of this House to take up a measure and consider it now is a fallacious one. The majority ought always to have that power. The minority should have the opportunity to have an expression of this House on all questions whenever it is demanded by a respectable minority of this body. If they have that, then we can not complain. It would be a great point gained if we could always have that.

The point which was made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] that this bill should not be given precedence over any other bill is not well taken, it seems to me, because it does not stand in the attitude of a bill upon one particular subject, but, rather, it stands in the place of all the criminal laws in the United States. It is the criminal code. It is the whole body of the law; it is the result of the work of a commission from 1897 to 1906 appointed to revise and codify the law, also the result of the committee's work on the report of the Commission. This committee has been considering it for the past two and a half years. The joint committee has considered it for a number of weeks, and I think, if we ever expect to get it considered by this House, especially at this session, we ought to begin now. It is very important, and no time is better than the present to consider it. The only way to get it considered is to take it up and give enough time to consider it fairly and fully. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I will not have time in the limited space allotted to me to answer the argument that has been offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], but I want to insist that, as a member of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, that, in my judgment, there is no more important measure to be considered at this session of Congress, saving and excepting the appropriation bills, than this particular measure presented by this committee. It is the work of a commission for more than ten years, at an enormous expense to the Government; of a committee throughout the entire Fifty-ninth Congress, and of a joint subcommittee throughout the vacation between the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses. I insist that if such constant labor does not make this bill an important piece of legislation no intelligent thought and active work will ever make a matter important in the estimation of this House.

Mr. Speaker, we will never understand this measure while the sun shines unless we get right down to a study of it here in the House. No Member can expect to take this measure to his office or to his home and properly consider and digest it by himself; he would never do it, no matter how much time he might be given to do it in.

Therefore I insist—as a member of the committee I must urge—that this House take up this question now and consider it, and codify the laws of the nation, so we may know what the laws are and where to find them; so we may know what and whom they affect. To that end, Mr. Speaker, I trust the rule will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I believe that exhausts all of my time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to use any more time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division, demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND, there were—ayes 206, noes 7.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri demands the yeas and nays. As many as are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and remain standing until counted. [After counting.] Eleven gentlemen have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11701) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill to codify and revise the penal laws of the United States, with Mr. BANNON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. DALZELL, Speaker pro tempore, having taken the chair, Mr. BANNON, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11701) for the codification of penal laws and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 456. An act to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 456. An act to provide for the holding of United States district and circuit courts at Salisbury, N. C.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's message and resolution distributing the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending that may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is it the intention of the gentleman to move to rise and adjourn as soon as the business of that committee is through with?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly, and I do not expect the committee will do any business except to further debate on the subject.

Mr. MANN. And there will be no further business in the House after that to-day?

Mr. PAYNE. Not if I am able to carry through a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House resolution 43.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the President's message and the resolution distributing the same, with Mr. OVERSTREET in the chair.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for the opportunity of addressing this honorable body to-day, because—

First. This is the ninety-second anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, fought in the main by troops from Tennessee and Kentucky, under the command of Maj. Gen. Andrew Jackson, born in 1767, whose remains were interred in the year 1845 at his home, the "Hermitage," 12 miles from Nashville, Tenn.

Second. The President, in his recent message, alludes to the Hermitage Association, duly chartered by the laws of Tennessee, in 1889, to have, and which has had since then, exclusive charge of the "Hermitage," the home and tomb of Andrew Jackson, and 25 acres of land immediately surrounding.

The President says:

I solemnly recommend to the Congress to provide funds for keeping up the Hermitage, the home of Andrew Jackson, these funds to be used through the existing Hermitage Association for the preservation of the historic building which should be ever dear to America.

Under its charter and the laws of Tennessee, if this association fails to properly care for the Hermitage—the home and tomb of Jackson—and this 25 acres of land, the entire premises revert, unencumbered, to the State.

In 1856 the State of Tennessee purchased from Andrew Jackson, jr., the adopted son of General Jackson, the Hermitage farm, containing 500 acres of land. For many years this son and his family were permitted to remain in possession. They paid no rent, nor has the State received any taxes or income from any portion of these premises. Four hundred and seventy-five acres of this farm have for several years been exclusively used by the State in maintaining the Confederate Soldiers' Home, located thereon. Mrs. Mary C. Dorris, regent of this association, in a recent letter furnishes me with a statement and history, in brief, of what the State and this association have accomplished as to the Hermitage. The President said to me yesterday: "The State has done nobly in this matter, and the Ladies' Hermitage Association deserves our everlasting praise."

Here is the pertinent part of the statement of Mrs. Dorris, to which I have just alluded:

PURCHASE OF HERMITAGE IN 1856 BY THE STATE OF TENNESSEE.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Amount of bonds | $48,000 | |
| Maturity at 6 per cent in 1892 | 103,680 | |
| | | $151,680 |
| Appropriations to Ladies' Hermitage Association from 1895 to 1897, at $600 per annum | 7,200 | |
| Special appropriations 1901 | 1,000 | |
| Special appropriations 1905 | 500 | |
| Special appropriations 1907–1908 | 1,000 | |
| | | 9,700 |
| Total | | 161,380 |

From 1889, the time of the organization of the association, to 1897, when Mrs. P. H. Manlove took charge of the books, the receipts amounted to an average of $1,000 per year. Total for eight years, $8,109.48.

This sum was expended in paying custodian and in repairs:

|---|---|
| A new tin roof was put on at a cost of | $687 |
| Cabin restored | 230 |
| Painting | 484 |
| Fencing | 855 |
| Total | 2,256 |

Money raised and expended by Ladies' Hermitage Association:

|---|---|
| From June 12, 1897, to May 15, 1899 | $4,517.26 |
| From May 15, 1899, to May 24, 1901 | 2,668.43 |
| From May 24, 1901, to May 13, 1903 | 3,421.90 |
| From May 13, 1903, to Apr. 18, 1904 | 1,504.33 |
| From Apr. 18, 1904, to May 17, 1905 | 1,415.05 |
| From May 17, 1905, to May 15, 1907 | 4,662.17 |
| From May 15, 1907, to Nov. 11, 1907 | 1,423.15 |
| Total | 19,612.29 |
| 1889 to 1897 | 8,109.48 |
| | 27,721.77 |
| State appropriation for curator | 6,000.00 |
| Appropriation for repairs, 1905 | 500.00 |
| Appropriation for repairs, 1907 | 500.00 |
| | 7,000.00 |
| Association has raised | 12,612.29 |
| Association has expended for relics | 6,500.00 |
| Balance | 6,112.29 |

This last statement from 1889 to 1897 is imperfect, having been taken from the minutes. To avoid further delay this account is sent. A fuller one is being prepared, which will be sent later.

This balance of $6,112.29 has been expended for repairs, fencing, trees, paint, plastering, sodding, and generally beautifying; repairing historic cabin, reroofing, building the cottage, the arbor, the pavilion, the furnace, Jackson day lectures (Bryan), souvenirs, etc., to make the money with which we have done all the work, including the purchase of the relics which belong to the association.

A. G. MANLOVE, Treasurer.

NASHVILLE, TENN., November 12, 1907.

You see from this that since 1856 the State has paid out in cash $161,380—$151,680 to buy this entire farm and $9,700 cash to aid this association, while the association has raised and expended on the Hermitage $27,721.71 since 1889, with more relics yet to buy and fences to fix, etc.

To-day, Mr. Chairman, to carry out the recommendations of the President, I introduced this bill:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated from the funds in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated the sum of $3,000 annually for the term of three years and $1,000 annually thereafter, which sums thus appropriated shall be paid quarterly to the Ladies' Hermitage Association of the State of Tennessee for the express purpose, and no other, of caring for "The Hermitage," the home of Andrew Jackson, situated near Nashville, in Davidson County, Tenn.

I submitted this bill to the President, and he promptly said: "That is all right. I see no reason why that should not be made the law."

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT AT THE HERMITAGE.

Last fall the governor of Tennessee, the Hon. M. R. Patterson; the Hon. James S. Brown, mayor of Nashville; the board of trade, and a large number of leading citizens, regardless of party affiliation, invited President Roosevelt to visit the Hermitage, a place he had often said to me he longed to visit. On the 22d of October last the President was welcomed to Nashville by our people, from the governor on down, and in a way that will make him and his party always feel glad that they came and rejoice, I dare say, in the hope of returning. He was received at the Hermitage by the Ladies' Hermitage Association. As he approached the portals of the historic Hermitage with hat in hand, he was met at the doorway, introduced to Mrs. Dorris, regent; Mrs. Rachel Jackson Lawrence, and other members, and instantly said:

At the very beginning I want to ask you ladies, have you any objection to Congress appropriating money to help your association in your beautiful and patriotic work?

I was not close enough to hear their reply, but, being a trustee of this association, I know the officers, directors, and trustees afterwards met and sent a resolution of thanks to the President and agreed to his proposition announced in his subsequent speech at the tomb, and so informed him. These good women were not expecting any such suggestion. No one had said anything to the President on this point. His proposition was purely voluntary.

The President was shown through the Jackson home. It was a feast to him. He particularly rejoiced that he had, for the first time, a chance to examine the great books in Jackson's library. He was glad to know the kind of books Jackson read. He was gratified at what he saw, and with the manner this home is kept by this association.

Through with the mansion, he went into the garden and saw the tomb of Jackson and his wife. There his friends, men and women, insisted that he permit his picture to be taken, while he stood on the steps of the tomb. This was done. Soon thereafter he delivered a most fervent and patriotic speech, within a few steps of the tomb, alluding to the work of this association and why it was the duty of Congress to aid—not take charge of—but aid this association.

The President said:

Oh, my friends, think how much it means to all our history, think how much it means to our people of to-day that we should have this Hermitage as a place of national pilgrimage for all citizens who wish to learn, to study, who wish to quicken their patriotism in the present by being here in the abode, in the living place of one of the great patriots of the nation's past. [Applause.]

On behalf of the nation I wish to thank the Ladies' Hermitage Association, who have preserved it. [Applause.] But I do not think it just or fair that the burden which should be supported by the nation should be a drain upon private purses. [Applause.]

It is greatly to your credit that you have done this work, which the nation ought to have done, but I shall do all that I can do to see that the nation relieves you, not of the management, but of the expense of the management. [Applause.] And I shall count on the hearty support of all the Senators and Congressmen from Tennessee and from every other State. [Applause.] I want to say that Andrew Jackson was a Tennesseean, But Andrew Jackson was an American, and there is not a State in this nation that can not claim him, that has not the right to claim him as a national hero. [Applause.]

DRAWS A SHARP DISTINCTION.

And surely no use of the public money can be better, can be wiser spent than in keeping up, for the inspiration of the future, the home of the great statesman.

I know the objection will be made that if we begin to take care of this house we shall be expected to take care of the houses of all the Presidents. I draw a sharp distinction between Old Hickory and a great many Presidents. [Applause.]

I remember the expression of his face when he said that. He was deliberate as a man can be, and he was right, eternally right, in what he said:

The Hermitage should be cared for by the nation in the same spirit that we now care for Mount Vernon. [Applause.] Of course Mount Vernon stands absolutely unique among all places, but the Hermitage represents the home of one of the three or four greatest Presidents this nation has ever had; of one of the three or four greatest public men that any nation has developed in the same length of time. [Applause.]

Andrew Jackson was a great national figure. His career will stand ever more and more as a source of inspiration for boy and man in this Republic. A soldier, a statesman, a patriot, devoted with a single mind to the welfare of his whole country. Let his whole country make it their object, acting through the National Government, to see that hereafter there is no question of keeping up the Hermitage and all its surroundings. [Applause.]

My friends, I have but a moment here in which to greet you. I did not come here to teach, but to learn. I did not come to speak, but to pay my respects to the home and the tomb of Andrew Jackson.

Public questions change from time to time. One generation has to meet and solve a given set of problems; the next generation has to meet and solve another set of problems: but the spirit in which these problems must be met, if they are to be successfully solved, can not change. The man who has the stuff in him to make a good citizen in one generation would be a good citizen in any other generation. That is true of civic life exactly as it is true of military life.

SPIRIT REMAINS UNCHANGED.

At New Orleans, General Jackson's troops fought with the long, heavy pea rifle—the old flintlock, the weapon that the first hunters carried when they came over the mountains into Tennessee and Kentucky. Weapons change, tactics change, but the spirit of the soldier who wins victories remains unchanged from generation to generation. [Applause.] And I believe that, at need, the American people would do well now in war, because I believe that we have among us men who would be borne up by the same spirit to which Andrew Jackson was able successfully to appeal on that misty January morning when, the fog lifting, showed the scarlet ranks of the gallant British regulars advancing to die in the assault on the breastworks at New Orleans. [Applause.]

So it was true of you men of the great war.

He was speaking to the old Confederate soldiers who had escorted him from the depot to the Ryman Auditorium in Nashville, and on horseback out 12 miles to the Hermitage, and who were round about him as he delivered this speech. They had come last summer to Washington and invited him to visit Nashville, promising the President they would guard and protect him from all danger. There was no danger, but they were his "special guard of honor."

Continuing, the President said:

You fought with the muzzle loader.

The President was here interrupted by a voice from the ranks, "And the flintlock;" and replied:

Some of them were flintlocks, I guess. Now we have the high-power small-caliber rifle; rifles that were new in your day, or unknown in your day, are antiquated now. The tactics change. They wear khaki instead of either blue or gray; but if ever the crisis comes, our men can only win if they show that they have now the same spirit that sent on to battle the men in blue and the men in gray in the dark years from '61 to '65.

[Applause.] There was applause on October 22 when he said that, gentlemen. Your applause to-day shows how closely in touch the people of the Hermitage district are with the applauding patriots of the House of Representatives. [Applause.]

The spirit does not change; and it is the spirit of the man that counts, as the ultimate and decisive factor in battle. We need organization; we need generalship, but organization and generalship can not avail unless the private soldier in the ranks, unless the average man with a musket has got the right stuff in him, for if he hasn't got the right stuff in him you can not get it out of him [laughter and applause] because it is not there to get out.

Just as it is in time of war, so it is in time of peace. Since Andrew Jackson's time, in the seventy years that have elapsed since he was President, the problems have changed. We have seen the growth of a great, complex, industrial civilization; we need different laws, and, therefore, different methods of administering the laws. But we must administer it in the spirit of Andrew Jackson—must administer all laws and enact them in the spirit of Andrew Jackson if our Government is to continue to be a success. [Applause.]

I should not say that Old Hickory was faultless. [Laughter.] I don't know very many strong men that have not got some of the defects of their qualities. [Applause.] But Andrew Jackson was as upright a patriot, as honest a man, as fearless a gentleman as ever any nation had in public or private life. [Applause.] His memory will remain forever a precious national heritage, and his public career should be studied and simulated by every public man who desires to be, in good faith, the servant of the whole people of the United States. [Applause.]

POWER OF CONGRESS.

This brings me to a discussion of the power of Congress to make this appropriation and the wisdom of the proposition. Under the Constitution Congress can establish and maintain our Army and Navy, and does so. Under that power Congress maintains and educates at West Point the raw student and teaches him how to make a useful and good soldier. After he graduates he goes into the service, is put up to be shot at in defense of our flag, and if he is killed or dies of disease Congress gives him a military burial—furnishing his shroud, his coffin, wraps around him the the Stars and Stripes, and furnishes his grave, the minister to pray at his grave, buries him, and carefully marks his grave and keeps a record of the soldier from the time he enters the service until he enters the grave, and even thereafter.

The same procedure, practically, is followed when we "muster in" the raw soldier and he dies.

So Congress looks after the soldier while he lives, buries his remains, and takes care of his grave.

JACKSON SOLDIER WHEN A BOY.

Was not Andrew Jackson a soldier from the age of about 14 years? Was he not practically in all of our struggles from the Revolutionary war down to the battle of New Orleans, when he was major-general in command? Was he not an illustrious soldier who was never vanquished? Was he not a statesman who was never conquered? Is he not to-day, both as a soldier and as a statesman, more in the limelight than any of our great men? When has Jackson ever been out of the limelight? Stop and think for a moment. Am I not right?

After the battle of New Orleans he was twice elected

President—and thereby became Commander in Chief—and well did he do his work, without fear or favor, in the interest of the great body of the people, upholding the Constitution and the law, ever purging the temple of its evil occupants. Yes, from an humble private he fought his way in the field until he became the active leader of our Army, and later the Commander in Chief.

I have not had the time to make a thorough study of the law covering Federal appropriations to bury and look after the graves of our soldiers of Jackson's class, but it does seem to me perfectly plain that Congress has the power to take entire charge of the Hermitage, if it so chooses, or do as the President recommends—simply aid the Ladies' Hermitage Association.

CONGRESS PROTECTS THE PRESIDENT.

Again, we care for and protect from danger and disease the President, while he is President, and the White House in which he lives, and furnish the money to see this well done. We surround the President with every influence to protect him, and we do so because he is President, a fortiori Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. If Congress has the legal right, and clearly it has, to thus act, surely Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to care for his tomb, and as an incident thereto, control the premises surrounding that tomb, and do so in such a way as Congress, in its wisdom, may direct.

THREE REASONS.

In brief, I submit that Congress has the military power to take care of the Hermitage, because of his illustrious military record, because Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and because he was President of the United States—one of the illustrious four.

NOT A BAD PRECEDENT.

Can you seriously contend that this would set a bad prececedent? I think not. We have never had but one Andrew Jackson, and never will. We have never had but one George Washington, and never will. We have never had but one Thomas Jefferson, and never will. We have never had but one Abraham Lincoln, and never will. These four Presidents are confessedly the Presidents of all our Presidents, and we have had but four of their kind in more than a century of our history. If we have the power and the money, and it is necessary, who will it harm for Congress to care for by aiding others in maintaining the homes of these illustrious men?

But "Lincoln left no home," as President Roosevelt said to me yesterday. Jefferson's home is owned and beautifully kept, but open to the public, by a private person, the Hon. Jefferson Levy, once a Member of this House, then, as now, a citizen of New York.

A PRECEDENT, IF WE NEED ONE.

Congress in 1889 appropriated $10,000 to survey a national roadway from Washington to Mount Vernon. The survey was made by a Federal engineer and his report is filed (51st Cong., 1st sess., Ex. Doc. No. 106). But some trolley lines were established and a steamboat service inserted to Mount Vernon, and hence this road has not been built. The President said to me yesterday that it would have to be built before many years and that he would approve a bill to aid the Mount Vernon Association, if it were necessary, carrying ten times more than my Hermitage bill.

A MODEST PROPOSITION.

But, gentlemen, the Ladies' Hermitage Association does not want, nor do the people of Tennessee, nor would I permit if I could avoid it, Congress to appropriate a sum so large as that it would appear, even to the bitterest enemy of Jackson, that the Volunteer State desired or was trying to surrender to the Federal Government the high trust which they have undertaken—preserving the Hermitage as Jackson left it. Far from that. They are not begging, but I submit, as a Member of Congress, that the Government of the United States owes it to the United States, owes it to our 90,000,000 people—who, after all, are the Government—to aid the Hermitage Association to care for the Hermitage.

General Jackson's fame, as the President said, and, as the Ladies' Hermitage Association nineteen years ago said (when it petitioned the legislature of Tennessee for the legal right to take charge of the Hermitage), the fame of Andrew Jackson and his illustrious character do not belong to Tennessee only. They belong to every State in the Union—to the whole United States—and we should all share in the beautiful trust of protecting his home and tomb.

TENNESSEE'S LOVE FOR JACKSON.

The State of Tennessee is proud to have his dust interred in the bosom of her soil. She is proud that he, at the age of 21, adopted Tennessee as his home; that he fought her battles; that he cut through the wilderness and helped to carry civilization over the mountains and along the blue-grass banks of the Cumberland.

Tennessee is proud of all she has done for Jackson and the Hermitage. Tennessee will continue to care for the Hermitage, though burdened with debt, as the State is and has been since the civil war.

Jackson helped to frame her first constitution and named the State "Tennessee." He was her first Representative in this House. He was twice her Senator. He was twice her choice for President, and thrice did she give her electoral vote to him. He was one of her supreme judges, and at an early day, and when the officer of the law could not, and did not, arrest the desperado, Jackson left the bench and did it himself. He loved law and order and upheld both, and every Tennesseean, in and out of that State, and every self-respecting man in this great Republic loves and respects his name. [Applause.]

A NATIONAL FAME.

But this is not all. Inseparably connected with the history of the United States, with her peace and her wars, the name of Jackson is interwoven, and no true history of our country can be written without placing him in the front ranks of our illustrious dead, as a soldier, as a statesman, and as President amongst, and as one of, the illustrious four.

No, sirs, the fame of Andrew Jackson, like the fruits of his great deeds, belongs not alone to any single State, but to the whole Republic, which he lived to preserve and for which he often tendered his life to defend. And it is a fit thing, Mr. Chairman, that the President of the United States, in his last message, should have called the attention of Congress to its duty, too long neglected, of aiding in protecting his home and tomb.

A NATIONAL HONOR.

It is an honor to the nation to have such a man as Jackson as one of her people. He was an honor when alive, and though he be dead, his example cheers us in the hour of gloom and gives us hope in the day of despair.

It is not often, in the limits of a century, that we have four such men as Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln, and the Government of the United States, enjoying the fame of their great names and the rich fruits of their glorious deeds, should be quick to show to the young men of this day, and ever hereafter, why they were honored when they lived and why we pay homage to their names, now that they are dead.

A STATE AND NATIONAL TRUST.

No, Mr. Chairman, the Ladies' Hermitage Association is ready to share with the United States in caring for the Hermitage. That is all it expects; it is all the President has recommended, whose judgment, as well as my own, is reflected in the modest bill which I have read in your hearing to-day. He asks, and I ask, as an humble Representative of the American Congress, that Congress honor itself and this great Republic, and the people thereof, by offering to help and by helping this association to maintain the Hermitage as Jackson left it. [Great applause.]

I was walking up Cherry street, in my beautiful home, Nashville, and I met Judge Anderson walking along with some money in his hand. I said "Judge, what are you doing?" He said, "One of our mutual friends [naming him] has died, and the lawyers are contributing money to bury him." I said, "I want to contribute, too." The deceased was my friend, and had been very unfortunate—more so than anybody. By an accident and a long illness he was stripped of his health and all his money, but not of friends, who gathered anxiously around his bier to pay honor to themselves in contributing to lay in a peaceful and respectable grave an honorable and able lawyer.

Now, suppose my friend had said to me, "No; I want to do this myself; I know you were good friends, but you shall not help." Gentleman, how chilling, how blighting, and how awful would have been such a rebuff! You have done just as I did. I am not the only one. That is almost an everyday occurrence.

Here is the State of Tennessee, which has paid $161,000 out of her own money to care for this home. Here is the Ladies' Hermitage Association, which has expended nearly $28,000 in preserving the house and tomb and buying relics—all to pay honor to Jackson, in the knowledge that Jackson's ashes lie in the bosom of Tennessee; that he was a Tennessean who loved the State, who loved the Union, who loved the flag, who loved the Constitution and protected it, and who rose in his might and said that it should survive and be supreme. Should the United States help Tennessee, or should Tennessee refuse if the United States offers to aid? Certainly not. [Applause.]

BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS.

Jackson began fighting at New Orleans early in December, 1814, but the decisive battle occurred on the 8th of January, 1815. In the main, the troops were from Kentucky and Tennessee, with a few from Mississippi and Louisiana. This battle was fought after the treaty of peace had been signed, December 24, 1814—a fact unknown to the warriors who fought this great battle. The English forces have been variously estimated by English authorities from twenty to twenty-five thousand, with a fleet of 50 ships carrying a thousand guns. Jackson's troops numbered about 8,000, and few ships. The troops of Packenham were the pride of the English Army, and those who were not killed or wounded by Jackson's troops subsequently fought under Wellington at Waterloo.

Of the English troops, it is estimated that 3,000 were killed, wounded, or missing after the battle on the 8th of January, while on that day there were only 6 killed and 13 wounded of Jackson's troops—a statement that is almost unbelievable, but Jackson so reported to the War Department and the true historial now agrees to the fact. The casualties of this battle are almost without precedent.

Jackson's troops were "uncaned," to use his own words; that is, they were citizen-soldiers or untrained troops. They left their homes with coonskin caps and squirrel rifles, flintlocks and rusty swords, with which they had guarded their homes from the Indians. Although Jackson was not advised as to the number of soldiers he had to meet, he assured the women and children of New Orleans that the enemy would never reach that city, and he made good his word.

TROUBLE IN NEW ORLEANS.

He had much to contend with in New Orleans, including an unfriendly legislature. Finally he was forced to declare martial law and had arrested and placed in jail a certain French editor for writing seditious articles in his paper. Judge Hall, of the Federal court, issued a writ of habeas corpus asked for by this editor, but Jackson promptly dispatched a handful of his troops and sent Judge Hall outside of his jurisdiction, with directions to remain until peace was declared. Judge Hall obeyed orders. Afterwards he returned to the city, and Jackson was arraigned in court for contempt. Jackson was refused the right to read his answer and defense, Judge Hall submitting interrogatories for him to answer, which Jackson refused to do.

JACKSON FINED.

He was fined $1,000, which Jackson promptly paid with his own money. Then he started to leave the court room and was picked up and carried out in the arms of the people. He had protected their homes, their wives, and daughters, and the people paid him the greatest homage. Later the women of that beautiful city collected a thousand dollars and offered to reimburse Jackson, and he declined, saying: "Take it and help the widows and orphans of the soldiers who fell in this battle." Many years afterwards Congress refunded this $1,000, with interest.

JOY TAKES PLACE OF FEAR IN WASHINGTON CITY.

The people in Washington City were living in despair until they heard of this great victory, and even the enemies of Jackson—and he had bitter ones—were lavish in their expressions of praise. He was no longer known as simply an "Indian fighter," but ever afterwards lived, and lives to-day, in their hearts.

JACKSON'S SOLDIERS.

The soldiers who fought this great battle were natural born soldiers, as the American man is. They loved liberty, they loved home, they loved wife, they loved daughter, they loved Jackson, the Stars and Stripes and all our flag means. Their ancestors had thrown off the English yoke and came to this country seeking liberty and established a republic to secure their happiness.

ONE DESERTER.

There was but one deserter of Jackson's troops. He went over and told Packenham that at a certain point the Tennesseeans and Kentuckians were stationed with flintlocks and squirrel rifles, making the weakest point in Jackson's column. The best of the English troops attacked that point, but they were met and mowed down and utterly routed, and the few that escaped looked up the deserter and hung him for not telling them the truth.

Mr. Chairman, this great battle did more than any other one battle we ever fought to set up the United States as a powerful sovereign in the eyes of all the world. But I discussed on this day last year that proposition, quoting from great men on the subject.

I sent last night to each Member of the House a recently published post card containing a picture of the Hermitage in which Jackson died. But Jackson did not live in that house; it was not built when we fought this great battle. He then lived in a little log cabin, as unpretentious as most any log house you ever saw. If any of you gentlemen wish to see a picture of that cabin, I have it here on a Hermitage Association folder. I will show it to you, my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHERWOOD], rich in years and wisdom, well remembering, I dare say, the days of Jackson and respecting his memory as much as I do or any other man should.

CABIN PRESERVED.

That cabin is being preserved by this association, Two hundred and thirty dollars has been recently spent in restoring it to the condition it was in when Jackson lived in it when he was known by some as only an "Indian fighter;" just as it was when he left to fight the battle of New Orleans; just as it was when he returned to its humble roof, the hero of New Orleans, amidst the plaudits of the nation. [Applause.]

I ask the indulgence of the committee while I read the statute enacted in 1856 by the legislature of Tennessee under and by virtue of which was purchased from Andrew Jackson, jr., the Hermitage farm of 500 acres.

AN ACT TO PURCHASE THE HERMITAGE.

Whereas it is good policy in a republican government to encourage habits of industry and to inculcate sentiments of veneration for those departed heroes who have rendered important services to their country in times of danger; and

Whereas Tennessee acknowldges no superior in feelings of patriotism and devotion to the Union, in whose cause the lamented Andrew Jackson acquired so much distinction: Therefore,

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Tennessee, That the governor of the State be empowered, and it is hereby made his duty, to purchase for the State of Tennessee 500 acres of the late residence of Andrew Jackson, deceased, including the mansion, tomb, and other improvements known as "The Hermitage."

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That whenever the said purchase is made and the title to said property secured to the State, that the governor is hereby authorized to cause the bonds of the State to be issued and to indorse the same in an amount not exceeding $48,000, the proceeds of which to be appropriated by him in carrying into effect the provisions of this act: Provided, That the governor and secretary of state, upon investigation, shall be satisfied said price is not exorbitant.

SEC. 3. Be it enacted, That the governor of this State be authorized and required to tender the said property to the General Government of the United States, upon the express condition that it be used as a site for a branch of the Military Academy at West Point; and in the event the General Government does not accept the tender thus made in two years from the expiration of this session of the general assembly, then the governor shall be authorized and required to have 50 acres laid off, including the tomb, the mansion, and the spring and the spring houses, and expose the balance to public sale, either as a whole or in lots, on time, or for cash, as to him may seem best, and make his report to the legislature of 1859–60.

The civil war came on and the tender was not made to the United States, and the State still owns the entire 500 acres of land.

PATRIOTIC TENNESSEEANS.

Since 1856, as I have shown you, the people of Tennessee have spent $187,380 in buying and preserving the home of Jackson. What other State has done as much in honor of her distinguished son?

With the greatest veneration for all Virginia is and has been, I beg to remind the committee that the State of Virginia was tendered an opportunity to buy the home and premises of George Washington, but declined, though Governor Johnson urged its purchase. About 1856 or 1858 Miss Cunningham, of South Carolina, organized the Mount Vernon Association of the Union, which did purchase this farm, of about 250 acres at that time, if I remember correctly, and the people throughout the United States contributed the funds to do so and to maintain it.

Who would not contribute to protect the home of a man who was the "father of his country," the man who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen?" While Washington was the "father of his country," was not Jackson its defender? Did not Jackson and his people—his two brothers and his old mother—aid in making this Republic possible? Surely they did. And this thought reminds me of a sad piece of Jackson history. Jackson never saw his father, who died a few days before Andrew was born. His grave is unmarked in Waxhaw Church graveyard. Nor did Jackson ever know the spot where his brothers, Robert and Hugh, were buried, but it is known that Hugh was buried in a soldier's grave. Andrew and Robert were captured and thrown in prison. Robert was 15 and Andrew 13. They were ordered by a British officer to black his boots. They refused, demanding that their rights as prisoners be respected, and the officer, with his sword, gave them scars which they carried to the grave and which finally cost Robert his life while in prison. He was buried, but Andrew never knew at what spot, being at the time of his burial at death's door.

GRAVE OF JACKSON'S MOTHER UNKNOWN.

This is all sad to know, but the saddest of all I have not told. It is that Andrew Jackson never knew where his mother was buried, if at all. She left home, went to Charleston, S. C., perhaps walking, and boarded a British ship to attend suffering American prisoners. She never returned. All that Andrew ever knew was some indefinite information of her death given by returning soldiers, who brought with them a bundle of her clothing. Jackson tried to locate her grave, but without avail. The late lamented Col. A. S. Colyar, author of "Life and Times of Andrew Jackson," in speaking of this sad history, says: "So the whole family are buried in unknown graves," except, of course, Andrew, whose fame, home, and tomb are the subjects of discussion on this illustrious day throughout the United States. Just think of it! Here is a mother who gave to the world three sons, to the Revolutionary war three sons, two of whom died as a result of that war, while one of them became the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, but who lived and died without knowing where his mother was buried, whose death was wrought in her efforts to save the lives of American prisoners on board a British ship in that same war.

Mr. Chairman, I had not thought of this remarkably sad history until a minute ago, but it reminds me of the bill I introduced to-day to appropriate $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, "to locate, mark, and properly protect" the graves of the American soldiers who fell at the battle of New Orleans. The Secretary of War informs me that they were buried in Chalmette Cemetery, New Orleans, La., but that is all that I have been able to learn on the subject. Congress should certainly know that the graves of these illustrious soldiers are properly marked and protected.

And now, in conclusion, I again submit, that the American Government, of which we are representatives, should do, and will do, itself honor in sharing in the efforts of Tennessee and the Ladies' Hermitage Association in protecting the home and tomb of Jackson—soldier, statesman, President—loved as much by the American people as any man who ever fought for the Stars and Stripes or who ever will fight for them. [Applause.]

Senate bill 461. An act of the forty-sixth general assembly.

An act to conditionally convey to a board of trustees for the Ladies' Hermitage Association 25 acres of the Hermitage tract, including the mansion and tomb of Gen. Andrew Jackson.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Tennessee, That 25 acres of the Hermitage tract, upon which are located the mansion, house, and tomb of Gen. Andrew Jackson, be, and they are hereby, conveyed in trust to the Ladies' Hermitage Association, and for said purpose the governor shall appoint, upon recommendation of the Ladies' Hermitage Association, nine discreet male white persons over the age of 25 years, two of whom shall be residents of East Tennessee, two shall be residents of West Tennessee, and five shall be residents of Middle Tennessee. They shall elect one of their members president, and one of their members secretary. Five members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business, and said board of trustees are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce such by-laws as may be necessary to put into operation and continual execution the objects and purposes for which this trust is created.

SEC. 2. Be it further enacted, That the objects for which this trust is created is to permit and encourage the Ladies' Hermitage Association to improve and beautify the mansion and other houses and the tomb, as well as the 25 acres upon which they are located, in such a manner as they may deem best, and to keep them in such high state of improvement and beauty as will display to the world the respect, love, and affection which should ever live in the hearts of an admiring people for their illustrious and departed chieftain: Provided, That visitors shall be allowed access to the grounds free of charge under reasonable rules to be prescribed by said society.

SEC. 3. Be it further enacted, That in the event the Ladies' Hermitage Association should at any time fail, neglect, or refuse to improve the house, tomb, and land herein conveyed, and to keep them in a high state of beauty and improvement, then said houses, tomb, and land and such other improvements as may be upon said 25 acres shall revert and go to the State of Tennessee without compensation to the trustees, Ladies' Hermitage Association, or other corporation or person. And the State shall not be required to pay any money whatever for such improvements as the trustees, Ladies' Hermitage Association, or other person or persons may have made upon said houses, tomb, or lands.

SEC. 4. Be it further enacted, That the trustees appointed as provided in section 1 of this act each shall hold his office for four years, and until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified, and all vacancies by death, removal, or expiration of term or otherwise shall be filled by the governor upon recommendation of the Ladies' Hermitage Association, as provided in section 1 of this act: Provided, The State may revoke this trust at will.

SEC. 5. Be it further enacted, That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and they are hereby, repealed, and this act take effect from and after its passage, the public welfare requiring it.

BY-LAWS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE LADIES' HERMITAGE ASSOCIATION.

1. The management of the affairs of the association shall be intrusted to a board of nine directors, to be elected by the members of the association at its biennial meetings, all of whose acts, however, shall be under the supervisory control of the trustees appointed by the governor, pursuant to the act of the legislature conveying the Hermitage property to this association.

2. The first biennial meeting of the association shall be held on the third Wednesday in May, 1889, and every two years thereafter at such place in Nashville as may be designated in the call.

3. The officers of the association shall consist of a regent (or president) and two vice-regents, secretary, and treasurer, who shall be elected at the regular biennial meetings and hold office until their successors shall have been elected and qualified.

4. The regent of the association shall be the supreme head of all the branch associations or societies which may be organized under the authority of the association; shall preside at all meetings and exercise a general supervising care over the prosperity of the association, and shall make an annual report of the condition of the association to the trustees. In her absence or disability, the senior or junior vice-regent, in order, may act.

5. The secretary shall make a record of all the transactions of the association in regular or special meeting, conduct all its correspondence, and do such other work as may be pertinent to the office of secretary, including such reports as the regent may require, and receive for her service a salary of $25 per month.

6. The treasurer shall receive all moneys for the association, from whatsoever source derived, and shall keep an accurate record thereof and pay out no money, except upon the order of the regent, or acting vice-regent, attested or countersigned by the secretary. The books shall be open to the inspection of any director or trustee. He shall make a report in writing to the regent semiannually, upon the 1st of May and the 1st of November of each year. He shall give bond, with security approved by two or more of the trustees, in the sum of $5,000, which shall be increased from time to time as required.

7. Any person may become a member of the association upon the payment of the sum of $1, but before a member shall be entitled to a vote in the biennial election of directors $1 additional must be paid thirty days prior to such election. Certificates of membership may be issued, signed by the regent and secretary.

8. The board of directors shall elect biennially at their meeting an executive committee of three from their number, who shall have power to employ a curator and as many servants or laborers as they may deem necessary; to contract with any corporation, firm, or person for any building, improvement, material, tools, teams, wagons, and generally to do whatever may be necessary to repair, improve, or renew the mansion, house, tomb, and other outbuildings and fences, and to lay off, cultivate, and beautify the grounds in such manner as they may deem best, provided they shall contract no debt exceeding the amount in the treasury: Provided further, That before any contract exceeding the sum of $500 be entered into the same shall be approved by a majority of directors at a regular or called meeting.

They shall also have power to authorize any plan, system, or enterprise for raising funds for the association, and their assent shall be required for any project under the auspices or in the name of the association, and all moneys so raised shall be duly reported and paid into the treasury.

9. The curator shall have charge of all the property of the association and shall reside upon the premises. He shall provide for the reception of visitors, who shall be allowed access to the grounds under rules to be prescribed by the association. He shall take good care of the property, keeping an oversight thereof, reporting from time to time to the regent such matters as in his opinion may require attention. He shall see to the faithful execution of all contracts for improvements upon the property, and shall advise with the executive committee.

He shall receive such compensation as shall be determined by the board of directors from time to time.

10. These by-laws may be altered, amended, or added to at any time by the permanent committee on by-laws, appointed by the trustees.

APPENDIX C.

The Ladies' Hermitage Association, Nashville, Tenn., was duly chartered and organized in 1889. The State legislature conveyed to it, through a board of trustees, the house in which Gen. Andrew Jackson lived, the tomb which marks his last resting place, and 25 surrounding acres, to beautify and preserve throughout all coming ages, in perpetual memorial of the great man who lived there through forty-one years of his eventful life, and whose ashes now repose beneath the soil.

Finding the place in a state of extreme dilapidation, the association has put forth its efforts to restore the mansion, grounds, and tomb to their original beauty.

So much has been done in the way of restoration that now the association is bending its energies toward the purchase of the Jackson relics, consisting of furniture, portraits, historical mementos, etc.

Much has been done in the way of gathering relics, and many beautiful articles of relic furniture, those belonging to and used by General Jackson himself, have been restored to the Hermitage, adding to its historic interest.

But much more remains to be done, as there is still a magnificent collection unpurchased, and it is to acquire these that efforts are now being put forth, and all moneys raised by the association by admission fees, memberships, and annual dues, by donations, and from any other sources are devoted to this purpose.

AMENDED BY-LAWS FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF THE LADIES' HERMITAGE ASSOCIATION.

At a meeting of the trustees of the Ladies' Hermitage Association, held at the office of the Union Bank and Trust Company, Nashville, Tenn., April 27, 1899, the following proceedings were had:

There were present: J. W. Lewis, J. M. Dickinson, T. A. Atchison, J. M. Head, S. G. Heiskell.

J. W. Lewis was elected president of the board, and J. M. Dickinson was elected secretary.

The by-laws, which were adopted March 15, 1897, were amended so as to read as follows:

1. The management of the affairs of the Ladies' Hermitage Association shall be intrusted to a board of nine directors, five of whom shall constitute a quorum, to be elected by the members of the association at its biennial meetings, all of whose acts, however, shall be under the supervisory control of the trustees appointed by the governor, pursuant to the act of the legislature conveying the Hermitage property to this association.

No one shall be eligible to the position of director who has not been an active member of the association and shall have paid her annual dues for a period of at least two full years next preceding the time of election.

2. The first biennial meeting of the association shall be held on the third Wednesday in May, 1889, and every two years thereafter at such place in Nashville as may be designated in the call.

Directors shall have regular monthly meetings, a uniform time for which shall be fixed by the directors at the first meeting after their election, and such called meetings as may be necessary; but at least three days' notice in writing, stating the object of the called meeting, shall be given, and no business shall be transacted which is not set out in the notice.

3. The officers of this association shall consist of a regent (or president) and two vice-regents, secretary and treasurer, who shall be elected by the directors at the regular biennial meetings, and hold office until their successors shall have been elected and qualified.

No one shall be eligible to the office of regent for more than two successive terms. All vacancies in the directory or offices may be filled by the directors at any regular meeting.

4. The regent of the association shall be the supreme head of all the branch associations or societies which may be organized under the authority of the association; shall preside at all meetings and exercise a general supervising care over the prosperity of the association, and shall make an annual report on the 1st of January of the condition of the association to the trustees. In her absence or disability the senior or junior vice-regent in order may act.

5. The secretary shall make a record of all the transactions of the association in regular or special meeting, conduct all its correspondence and do such other work as may be pertinent to the office of secretary, including such reports as the regent may require.

6. The treasurer shall receive all moneys for the association, from whatsoever source derived, and shall keep an accurate record thereof and pay out no money except upon the order of the regent or acting vice-regent, attested or countersigned by the secretary. The books shall be open to the inspection of any director or trustee. The treasurer shall make a report in writing to the regent semiannually, upon the 1st of May and the 1st of November of each year; shall give bond with security approved by two or more of the trustees, in the sum of $1,000, which shall be increased from time to time as required by the trustees.

7. The membership of the association shall consist as follows:

First. Life members, who shall pay the sum of $25 or more, and shall be exempt from annual dues. Such members shall be entitled to attend all meetings of the association, and shall have a life admission ticket to the Hermitage free.

Second. Members who shall pay $1 to join the association and annual dues of $1. The annual dues shall be payable on January 1 for the preceding year, but no person shall be required to pay such dues who shall not have been a member for more than six months. There shall be kept by the secretary and under the supervision of the directors a list of members to be known as "Active members." Any member can direct, either at the time of joining or at any time thereafter, that her name be put on the list of active members, and it shall be done. No member shall be entitled to vote in any of the meetings of the association who shall not have paid her annual dues and whose name shall not have been directed to be put on the list of active members at least sixty days before the privilege to vote is claimed.

No one shall be entitled to vote at any meeting until such person shall have been a member of the association for at least one year next preceding the meeting at which the right to vote is claimed, and shall have paid at least one annual due.

All voting by the members of the association shall be in person and not by proxy. Certificates of membership may be issued, signed by the regent and secretary.

It shall be the duty of the secretary to give notice on April 1 of each year to those members of the association who are then delinquent in the payment of their annual dues for the preceding year. If any member of the association shall not by July 1 of any one year have paid her dues for the next preceding year, the name of such member shall be dropped from the roll of membership, and such person shall no longer be a member of the association.

8. The board of directors shall have power to employ a curator and as many servants or laborers as they may deem necessary; to contract with any corporation, firm, or person for any building, improvement, material, tools, teams, wagons, and generally to do whatever may be necessary to repair, improve, or renew the mansion, house, tomb, and other outbuildings and fences, and to lay off, cultivate, and beautify the grounds in such manner as they may deem best, provided they shall contract no debt exceeding the amount in the treasury.

The board of directors shall have power to appoint from time to time from the active members such special committees as they shall see proper, but such committees shall at all times be under the supervision and control of the board of directors.

They shall also have power to authorize any plan, system, or enterprise for raising funds for the association, and their assent shall be required for any project under the auspices or in the name of the association, and all moneys so raised shall be duly reported and paid into the treasury.

9. The curator shall have charge of all the property of the association, and shall reside upon the premises. He shall provide for the reception of visitors, who shall be allowed access to the grounds under rules to be prescribed by the association. He shall take good care of the property, keeping an oversight thereof, reporting from time to time to the regent such matters as in his opinion may require attention. He shall see to the faithful execution of all contracts for improvements upon the property, and shall advise with the board of directors. He shall receive such compensation as shall be determined by the board of directors from time to time.

10. All rules and regulations inconsistent with these by-laws are annulled and void.

11. These by-laws may be altered, amended, or added to at any time by the permanent committee on by-laws appointed by the trustees.

12. These by-laws shall be printed and a copy sent to every person who is now a member of the association within twenty days from this date.

James M. Head, S. G. Heiskell, and J. M. Dickinson were appointed a committee on by-laws, with full authority to make such changes in the by-laws from time to time as they might deem proper.

The meeting then adjourned sine die.

J. M. DICKINSON, Secretary.

THE INSCRIPTIONS:

Gen. Andrew Jackson,

Born March 15, 1767. Died June 8, 1845.

Here lie the remains of Mrs. Rachel Jackson, wife of President Jackson, who died the 22d of December, 1828, aged 61 years. Her face was fair, her person pleasing, her temper amiable, her heart kind; she delighted in relieving the wants of her fellow-creatures and cultivated that divine pleasure by the most liberal and unpretending methods; to the poor she was a benefactor; to the rich an example; to the wretched a comforter; to the prosperous an ornament. Her piety went hand in hand with her benevolence, and she thanked her Creator for being permitted to do good. A being so gentle and so virtuous slander might wound, but could not dishonor; even Death, when he bore her from the arms of her husband, could but transport her to the bosom of her God.

BANCROFT'S TRIBUTE TO GEN. ANDREW JACKSON.

No man in private life so possessed the hearts of all around him; no public man of this country ever returned to private life with such an abiding mastery over the affections of the people. No man with truer instincts received American ideas; no man expressed them so completely or so boldly or so sincerely. Up to the last he dared to do anything that was right to do. He united personal courage and moral courage beyond any man of whom history keeps record. Not danger, not an army in battle array, not age, not the anguish of disease could impair in the least degree the vigor of his steadfast mind. The heroes of antiquity would have contemplated with awe the unmatched hardihood of his character, and Napoleon, had he possessed his disinterested will, could never have been vanquished.

Jackson never was vanquished. He was always fortunate. He conquered the wilderness; he conquered the savage; he conquered the bravest veterans trained on the battlefields of Europe; he conquered everywhere in statesmanship, and when death came to get the mastery over him he turned the last enemy aside as tranquilly as he had done the feeblest of his adversaries and passed from earth in the triumphant consciousness of immortality.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. DALZELL having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. OVERSTREET, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration House resolution No. 43, for the distribution of the President's message, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following changes of reference were made:

The bill (H. R. 500) to provide for the settlement of certain claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for the loss or destruction, without fault or negligence on the part of said officers and men, of property belonging to them in the military service of the United States—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FLINT presented petitions of the city council, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, of Los Angeles, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation for the establishment of harbor lines for the inner harbor at San Pedro, Cal., which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the National Association of Audubon Societies, praying that an appropriation be made to continue the Bureau of Biological Survey in the Department of Agriculture, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Captain Charles V. Gridley Camp, No. 94, Sons of Veterans, of Erie, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase and equalize the salaries of officers and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue-Cutter Service, etc., of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Navigation Conference of New York City, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the national harbor of refuge at Point Judith, Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRANDEGEE presented a memorial of Barcelona Council, No. 42, Knights of Columbus, of Waterbury, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend and reclassify second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SIMMONS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Elizabeth City, N. C., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented an affidavit to accompany the bill (S. 219) to correct the military record of Smith F. Carroll, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS (for Mr. LONG) presented a memorial of 45 merchants of Garden City, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill," which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also (for Mr. LONG) presented a petition of sundry veterans of the civil war of Chautauqua County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for more liberal pensions, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Portage, Wis., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the disfranchisement of citizens of the United States on account of sex, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Navigation Conference of New York City, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the national harbor of refuge at Point Judith, Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURROWS presented a paper to accompany the bill (S. 571) for the relief of Myron Powers, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PROTECTION OF HARBOR DEFENSES AND FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. FRYE. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1427) to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1898, and I submit a report thereon.

The bill was reported unanimously at the last session from the Committee on Commerce and passed the Senate without objection. It is again reported unanimously. Its provisions are easily understood.

Under a plan of national defense approved by the President, certain duties were assigned to the Navy touching the ingress and egress of ships and patrol in time of war. The Army had certain duties assigned to it, and by statute the necessary provisions were made. This bill simply adds to that statute, after the word "Army," the word "Navy," and then provides a penalty for a violation of the naval orders, the same as the penalty provided for a violation of army orders. I should like to have it considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LITTLE CONTENTNEA RIVER, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. OVERMAN, December 16, 1907, reported it without amendment, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Little Contentnea River, North Carolina, from the mouth of same to the town of Ridge Springs, in Greene County, N. C., with a view of dredging, cleaning out, and widening the channel, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

SURVEY OF CORSICA RIVER, MARYLAND.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. RAYNER on the 7th instant, reported it without amendment, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Corsica River, Maryland, and to submit a plan and estimate for its improvement.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. There is an urgent demand for the survey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SURVEY OF COLUMBIA RIVER IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. PERKINS. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 21) providing for a preliminary examination and survey of the Columbia River between Priest Rapids and Wenatchee, State of Washington, to report a concurrent resolution. I ask the attention of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] to it.

Mr. ANKENY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made a preliminary examination and survey of the Columbia River between Priest Rapids and Wenatchee, State of Washington, with a view to open-channel work, the necessary expense of the same to be paid from the fund for examinations, surveys, and contingencies.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG SIGNAL ON BELLINGHAM BAY, WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 623) to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on Eliza Island, Bellingham Bay, State of Washington, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a light-house and fog-signal station be established on Eliza Island, Bellingham Bay, State of Washington, together with a suitable building, under the direction of the Light-House Board, and that the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated therefor out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the bill, but I wish to give notice that hereafter I shall object to taking up any bill on the report of a committee unless there is some reason shown why it should be taken up immediately on being reported. According to the rules of the Senate, bills, when reported, should go to the Calendar. In this case I am not going to object, but hereafter I shall object.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3019) to construct a tender for the use of the inspector of the first light-house district, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CRANE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 433) for a light-house at Cape Arago, Oreg., reported adversely thereon and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3020) to construct a tender for the use of the engineer of the first and second light-house districts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 713) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of additional light-house districts," approved June 26, 1886, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1774) to permit Dollie A. Fountain, of Walworth County, S. Dak., to purchase certain lands, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1387) for the relief of a certain class of homestead settlers on the public lands, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2712) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and cancel the allotment of William Jondron, Yankton Sioux allottee, should it prove to be fictitious, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 17), to amend the provision in the river and harbor act of March 2, 1907, relating to the Sandy Lake reservoir dam, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 551) relating to commutation of homestead entries and to confirm such entries when commutation proofs were received by local land officers prematurely, to report it without amendment and I submit a report thereon.

This is a unanimous report from the committee; and a similar bill was unanimously reported at the last Congress and passed by the Senate. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I object to the consideration of the bill. I think bills of importance should go to the Calendar, and we ought to have an opportunity to know what they are.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1666) for the relief of Stene Engeberg, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BOURNE, from the Committee on Fisheries, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 113) to establish a fish-hatching and fish-culture station at Dell Rapids, S. Dak.;

A bill (S. 507) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Nebraska;

A bill (S. 141) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Idaho;

A bill (S. 387) to establish a fish-culture station at the city of Fargo, in the State of North Dakota;

A bill (S. 535) to establish a fish-culture station in the State of Utah;

A bill (S. 2640) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Kansas; and

A bill (S. 648) to establish a fish-culture station in the State of Wyoming.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 720) to confirm an entry made by Gertrude Halverson Aaby, widow of Sigbjorn H. Aaby, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

FEDERAL ANTITRUST DECISIONS.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following concurrent resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 3,000 copies of the Federal Antitrust Decisions, 1890–1906, compiled by the direction of the Department of Justice, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

HERNAN ULLOA, OF COSTA RICA.

Mr. WARREN. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica. The joint resolution is very short. It is a matter of courtesy to a neighboring friendly foreign country, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution reported by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, on the 7th instant, to report it favorably with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate or recess of Congress, and that the expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the word "papers," insert a comma and strike out the word "and;" in line 5 strike out the words "any subject which may be" and insert in lieu the words "bills or other matters;" at the end of line 6, after the word "sessions," insert the words "or recess;" in line 7, after the word "Senate," insert a semicolon and strike out the words "or recess of Congress;" and in line 8, after the word "Senate," strike out the remainder of the resolution; so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with bills or other matters pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate; and that the expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

Mr. HALE. I introduce a bill to increase the efficiency of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States, and as the matter is one of great importance and has excited much interest, I ask that the bill may be read by the Secretary.

The bill (S. 3335) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the entire business of the Navy Department under the Secretary of the Navy shall be transacted by the bureaus and offices of the Department as now existing, and all reports and recommendations of such bureaus and offices shall be made direct to the Secretary of the Navy. No permanent board of any kind shall be hereafter appointed by the Navy Department, or continued in operation unless expressly provided for by law, after the passage of this act; but, from time to time, the Secretary of the Navy may convene boards for temporary service connected with the pending business of the Department.

SEC. 2. That officers in the various staff corps of the Navy shall hereafter have actual rank and title as now established for the staff corps of the Army. Such officers of the staff corps of the Navy shall at all times have the title and designation of their rank, and new commissions in accordance therewith shall be forthwith issued to them: Provided, That this provision shall in no case carry with it command over any vessel of the Navy Department, but such command shall be exercised only by line officers.

SEC. 3. That hereafter from the midshipmen who sucessfully complete the six years' course at the Naval Academy appointments shall be made as may be necessary, and in the order of merit at graduation, to fill vacancies in the lowest commissioned grades of the line and other corps of the Navy to which such graduates are eligible for appointment under existing law, and that the number of said appointments which shall be made to the various corps of the naval service in any one year shall not exceed seventy-five: Provided, That the foregoing provision limiting the increase in any fiscal year shall not apply to midshipmen who may have entered the Naval Academy prior to January 1, 1904, and have completed their four years' course at the academy. That the order of merit of graduates of the Naval Academy upon final graduation, and the eligibility to appointment in the Navy, shall be determined as now provided by existing law and regulation, and the assignment of graduates to the various corps shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided further, That if there be a surplus of graduates above that necessary to fill the vacancies in the manner and to the extent hereinbefore authorized, those who do not receive such appointment shall be given a certificate of graduation, an honorable discharge, and one year's sea pay; and hereafter any midshipman whose position in his class entitles him to be retained in the service may, upon his own application, be honorably discharged at the end of the four years' course at the Naval Academy, with a proper certificate of graduation. The appointments herein authorized shall be made upon July 1 of each year, which shall be regarded as the beginning of the year for reckoning vacancies for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 4. That when an officer has been thirty years in the service he may, upon his own application, in the discretion of the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list. When an officer has served forty consecutive years as a commissioned officer, he shall, if he makes application therefor to the President, be retired from active service and placed upon the retired list. And any officer of the Navy who is now serving or who shall hereafter serve as chief of a bureau of the Navy Department, and shall subsequently be retired, shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances authorized by law for the retirement of such bureau chief.

SEC. 5. That the pay of all commissioned officers, warrant officers, midshipmen, and pay clerks in the Navy and Marine Corps is hereby increased 20 per cent. And the pay of all noncommissioned officers, mates, and other petty officers, musicians, and other enlisted persons in the Navy and Marine Corps is hereby increased 40 per cent: Provided, That the word "pay" as used in this section shall be exclusive of all additions in the form of allowances and commutations.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts, so far as they conflict with the provisions of this act, are hereby repealed.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in view of the very great importance of the bill, especially at this time, when the attention of the country is attracted to a recent transaction in the Navy Department involving the resignation of one of the distinguished officers of the Navy, I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether in the consideration of it, as of course it will go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, an opportunity will be given to have all the facts brought out relating to the personnel and the controversy in the Navy Department, the articles in the magazines, and the other charges, the criminations and recriminations, that are floating back and forth. Will we in the Naval Committee be able to get at the facts? I have had an idea of introducing a resolution instructing the Naval Committee to inquire and report upon the subject, but if we can reach the facts by this method it is just as satisfactory to me. I should like to have the chairman explain just on that point as well as to give an explanation of the various provisions of the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the Senate will bear with me not for long, I will make a statement.

I have been asked a great many times by people having a most intelligent interest in the Navy whether, in view of recent transactions in the Navy Department and the great public interest in these transactions, I did not propose to introduce a resolution of investigation. The subject undoubtedly is worthy of the direct attention of Congress. Looking the matter over as carefully as I have been able to do, I have selected the method of action covered by this bill involving full consideration and discussion by the Senate, instead of submitting the Department to an investigation upon a Senatorial inquiry. I have thought it better to frame a bill, which I do not of course claim to be perfect, but which will cover, as I think, the many controversies, not only that which has arisen and sharply attracted public attention of late, but old troubles and jealousies between the different grades and ranks of the Navy Department.

Section 1 of the bill commits all of the business of the Department to its various bureaus and offices, the term "offices" embracing all minor organizations not included in the bureaus.

Every accomplishment of the Navy heretofore has been done by the action of these bureaus. It is only of late years that permanent boards have been organized.

I have nothing to say about the make-up of these boards. Many of them are officers whom we respect and regard, and whom we like very greatly. But I have thought, upon rather close observation in the Navy, that the general operation of these boards has been to create dissension and to make trouble for the bureaus and other offices of the Navy, where the real work of the Department must be done. So I have embodied in this bill a provision that unless such boards are specifically authorized by law they shall not be continued, and that no new board shall be appointed. That is not intended as any reflection upon any officer who is a member of any of the boards, but it is, I believe, a wise thing to do, in order that the jealousies and the very sharp and at times I think unjust insinuations and aspersions upon the bureau officers of the Navy should at least have no rallying point in the Department.

I have been led to do this because I do not know any time when the bureaus of the Navy Department have been filled at the head by more able, honest, energetic officers than at present. It applies both to the line and the staff. It is an assemblage of men, when they are brought together for consultation by the Secretary of the Navy, as they may be under this bill, that any Cabinet officer or any President may be glad to consult with and work with. So I have thought it better to make that the first feature of the bill.

The next feature deals with what has been a battle ground in the Navy for forty years or more—the differences arising between the line and the staff, between the active officers of the Navy, in command of the Navy in all its various and diverse component parts, and the staff officers who have raised questions or upon whom questions have been raised with reference to rank and title and recognition.

I looked over the precedents afforded by the Army and I find there the staff corps with duties nearly parallel so far as the two establishments can be assimilated to the duties of staff officers in the Navy. I have found that actual rank has been given there, conceded for years, and gives rise to no conflict, to no trouble, but on the other hand has freed the War Department from many troubles, embarrassments, and controversies that perplex and disturb the Navy. So I have provided in terms that, like the Army, staff officers shall receive recognition with actual rank and title, and that these shall be accorded everywhere.

But, Mr. President, after a very careful examination, and from a long observation of the workings of the Navy Department, I have thought it wise to insert this provision for the committee's consideration and for the Senate's consideration, should the bill ever come before this body. I propose to provide—

That officers in the various staff corps of the Navy shall hereafter have actual rank and title as now established for the staff corps of the Army. Such officers of the staff corps of the Navy shall at all times have the title and designation of their rank, and new commissions in accordance therewith shall be forthwith issued to them: Provided, That this provision shall in no case carry with it command over any vessel of the Navy Department, but all such command shall be exercised only by line officers.

I am not going to debate that proposition. It would be unseemly if I should do so at the present time. Everybody has considered it. There are two sides to it. I have simply incorporated it in the bill in order that it may be considered by the committee, and if we should report it back it may be considered by the Senate.

The next provision is a very important one, perhaps in a way the most important in the bill, to the future of the personnel of the Navy. As Senators know we have built, fitted up, and furnished the most elaborate, magnificent naval school establishment in all the wide world. There is nothing under any of the great powers of Europe that approaches the magnitude and completeness of the Annapolis Naval Academy. Not only have we done that, but we have doubled and quadrupled in some respects the number of appointments of cadets, or, as they are now called, midshipmen. Every Senator has two, every Member has two. The result is that to-day there are of midshipmen at the Naval Academy 852, and at sea 312, or 1,164, more than 200 in excess of the number of all of the line officers of the entire Navy.

Now, one thing is sure to result from this. When these immense classes begin to complete their graduation and at the end of six years are poured into the lower ranks of the Navy, there is at once a glut, or what we used to call a "hump." The lower ranks are unduly swollen. There is no opportunity, except slight, for emergence or issue, and unless something is done to arrest this condition a bright youth, after his six years' course in the Academy, receiving the appointment of ensign, will be twenty-five or thirty years older before he will attain the rank of lieutenant-commander.

I did not know, with accuracy such as a man should possess in order to speak here, until I examined and found out, that the number of ensigns and lieutenants to-day, without this vast number of appointments to pour in during the next five years, amounts to 523, and all the other line officers of the Navy number only 442. In the presence of so great an evil, in the presence of what would probably destroy every incentive to ambition on the part of a youth entering the Navy, I have, after a good deal of examination and a thorough investigation of former conditions in the Navy, which, as some older Senators may remember, we finally settled by an enactment which, without taking away the number of appointments and without cutting down the midshipmen in the course, provided that up to a certain point, to be decided by examination, the brightest and ablest and most prominent of the midshipmen graduating should be promoted to the grade of ensign and that all the others should receive a certificate that they had complied with the rules of the Department and of the Academy; that they had graduated with honor, and then giving them a year's pay and leaving them to enter civil life.

This provision, Mr. President, worked admirably. The provision of the bill I have introduced will not work so sweepingly as the old one, because I think for a year or two after the passage of the old act, on which this provision in my bill has been based, at times only from ten to fifteen midshipmen were yearly taken into the Navy, and all the rest, fully equipped with a very fine education, were left to civil life.

I may say, Mr. President, in making the way easy for this, that many of these graduates now take the opportunity of resigning and using the education that the Government has given them free to enter the many employments of civilian life. It is not a hardship in that respect. It endows these young men, as I have said, with a first-class education, and we have found in a smaller way in the operation of the old acts that these young men have been heard of afterwards in civilian life. I have in mind a case in my own State, where I have been thanked a dozen times by a young officer who, leaving the Navy, went into civil life and became very eminent in the line of employment which he followed. As I have said, he has thanked me a dozen times for the part I had in giving him the opportunity of using his education in civil rather than in military life.

So I have provided in this bill that not more than seventy-five midshipmen each year shall be taken into the service, and the others shall be given their certificates and allowed to go into the other side of life—the civilian side.

It can not be said that this will cripple the Navy, because it needs more officers, for to-day, with only the present list of line officers, almost the entire fleet of the United States has either been dispatched to the Pacific Ocean or is there now. These great aggregations of naval force will, combined, practically represent almost the entire naval force. It is completely manned. It is completely officered. There is no lack—at least I have heard of none—of officers to share in the duties and in command of the vessels of these enormous squadrons that are to be united in the Pacific Ocean.

In addition to that, Mr. President, there are to-day in every bureau of the Navy Department, in every naval station and navy-yard, large numbers of these younger line officers who are engaged in safe, easy, and agreeable shore duty. I am told in number they amount to from 100 to 150. So that it can not be claimed that this provision of the bill I have introduced is intended in any way to cripple the Navy by cutting off needed proper officers. I have no fear, Mr. President, that the Navy will ever suffer under the operation of this bill by lack of officers.

There are some other provisions that are not of large general importance, but the last section—section 5—of the bill deals with the question of the increase of pay. I want to say here to the Senate and to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that the bill dealing with the increase of pay of both the Army and the Navy introduced here by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DICK] and in the House by Mr. CAPRON, of Rhode Island, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. In dealing with this subject I gave a good deal of time to it and came to the conclusion, after looking up all the questions relating to the pay of the different grades in both Army and Navy and their diverse and sometimes complicated allowances, that it was practically impossible to frame a bill that would apply to both branches alike. The decisions as to what is pay and what is allowance in the different branches are different. I found, to my surprise, that I had to spend a whole day in getting at a phrase that would cover what is the "pay" upon which an increase, if it is allowed, shall be based. I went over all that as carefully as I could with the law officers of the Navy Department, and finally incorporated in the bill which I have presented the following provision:

SEC. 5. That the pay of all commissioned officers, warrant officers—

I will say that my trouble was in getting a line of demarcation. I do not know whether the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will find that so in the Army, but I found it difficult to get language that would make a line of demarcation between the officers and what we will call the "rank and file." Certain language would include certain officers with the rank and file, which it ought not to do. So, after looking up all the decisions, including half a dozen of the Supreme Court on this very subject, I adopted this phraseology:

That the pay of all commissioned officers, warrant officers, midshipmen, and pay clerks—

Pay clerks were put in specially, although they are not actually officers—

SEC. 5. That the pay of all commissioned officers, warrant officers, midshipmen, and pay clerks in the Navy and Marine Corps is hereby increased 20 per cent. And the pay of all noncommissioned officers, mates, and other petty officers, musicians, and other enlisted persons in the Navy and Marine Corps is hereby increased 40 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator further than to ask a question or two. My attention was diverted for a moment. I observe that the Senator's bill proposes to increase the pay of officers 20 per cent over their present pay; also the pay of enlisted men. Does that apply to such men or officers as have heretofore had their pay regulated from time to time by the Department or by the President?

Mr. HALE. To what class of officers does the Senator refer?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator was speaking of the rank and file and of the officers. Of course the Senator knows that in the Navy, in regard to the rank and file as well as in regard to some officers, the pay is within the control of the Executive Department. I wish to know whether their pay is increased in the proposed bill 20 per cent over the pay which they now receive, taking as a basis that which of itself has been heretofore fixed by the Department and happens to be just now the prevailing rate of compensation.

Mr. HALE. That, Mr. President, is comprehended in the second clause, which provides that—

The pay of all noncommissioned officers, mates, and other petty officers, musicians, and other enlisted persons in the Navy and Marine Corps is hereby increased 40 per cent—

Which is double that given to the officers. I have thought it better to put it in here, so that the bill may carry not only what is the established pay by law of officers, but which has heretofore been largely at the discretion of the Department as to the rank and file. So that the bill provides for both—the officers receiving 20 per cent increase and the rank and file 40 per cent.

I have thought, Mr. President—a bill covering this matter for both branches of the service failed in the last Congress—I have thought, in view of the increased expense and the burden of maintaining human life in domestic establishments and the fact that we largely increased the compensation of Members of Congress and many of the executive officers of the Government, that it was nothing more than right and fair, although it will involve a large sum of money, to give this increase to the Naval Establishment. It applies as much to the rank and file as to the officers, and the former increase is double that given to the latter.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HALE. I am very glad to do so.

Mr. WARREN. Without wishing to be understood as making any objection to raising the pay, as the Senator proposes, I want a little further information. As I understand, the Senator proposes to add 40 per cent to what is now the pay of the rank and file, that pay having been established by the Executive Department and being already considerably in excess of the compensation paid to those in the Army of corresponding rank and duties, because the law prescribes in an ironclad way in the case of the Army what the Executive has the privilege of providing in the other—that is, the pay of the "rank and file" of the Navy. But am I to understand that now the pay of the Navy is to be fixed by law at 40 per cent more for the rank and file than the present pay of the rank and file as it has been prescribed by the Department, and that hereafter the rate of compensation of all officers and men of the Navy shall alike remain fixed by statute, as is now the case in the Army?

Mr. HALE. That, Mr. President, is just what is embodied in my bill. I am glad to have any Senator interrupt me. If the Senator will indulge me a moment, I have no pride of belief that this is a perfect bill; but it is the best I can do as a solution of the great troubles of the Navy Department. I found exactly what the Senator from Wyoming has referred to—the differences between the Army and the Navy in this regard—and I thought it better, perhaps, to take the Army's rule, that the Congress fix all of this, so that if the Senator, reporting a bill from his committee, takes up the subject of the pay of the Army he will have the benefit, if there is any benefit, of any light thrown by the provisions of this bill and of seeing what the committee does and the Senate does with reference to the Navy.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I do not interrupt the Senator——

Mr. HALE. Not in the least.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. If I understand correctly, the situation is something like this: The bill that was introduced early in this session covering an increase of pay for both the Army and the Navy was first referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, but recalled the next day from that committee because of the wish of the introducer of the bill, the Senator from Ohio, Mr. DICK, who is a member of the Naval Committee, that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I assume from the tenor of the remarks of the Senator from Maine—I said before that my attention was diverted—that he expects the Committee on Military Affairs to take up the subject of the increase of pay of the Army and consider it during this session while this bill for the Navy is under consideration.

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is my expectation and hope. If the Senator pursues that course I shall be very glad.

Mr. WARREN. I am very glad to have the bill brought in early if it is to be for Navy separated from Army, because it is a subject which will require some time in the working out. The Committee on Military Affairs has until this morning assumed that we should hear promptly from the Committee on Naval Affairs as to the provision of a new rate of pay for both Army and Navy.

Mr. HALE. That is one of the reasons which has urged me to introduce this bill early——

Mr. WARREN. I am glad the Senator has advised us early.

Mr. HALE. That the military committee might have the benefit of it in dealing with Army pay and that Congress should have the benefit of it. After a great deal of consultation I adopted this provision:

That the word "pay" as used in this section shall be exclusive of all additions in the form of allowances and commutations.

That, Mr. President, is the best I could do in trying to solve the troubles that beset this great Department. I think the passage of this bill will unify the Department, will rid it of these troublesome, vexatious, and jealous questions that have arisen in years past; that it will establish a safe influx into the Navy; that it will properly increase the pay of officers of the rank and file, and that at last not only we here, but those who live beyond our voice, will see peace in the Navy Department. But I may be wrong. I have said that I have no pride of opinion in the matter. I shall ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; I shall ask that that committee take it up at an early day, and then will be considered every question that might arise under a Senatorial resolution to investigate the Navy Department.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from Maine have presented at some time and spread upon the record the present rates of pay of the Navy, upon which this proposed percentage of increase may be based? I think the Senate will be glad to have that information.

Mr. HALE. That is a valuable suggestion. I will furnish it so far as is now practicable, and I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The leader of the United States Marine Band receives the pay and allowances of a first lieutenant.

"Class 3" is the term used to designate men who have ever received reenlisted pay under the act of August 4, 1854, but have allowed a longer period than three months to elapse before again enlisting.

Members of the Marine Band are allowed $4 per month additional for playing at the White House and public grounds, under the provisions of the act of August 18, 1856.

All enlisted men of the Marine Corps regularly detailed as gun pointers, messmen, or signalmen, or holding good-conduct medals, pins, or bars receive the same extra compensation, in addition to their monthly pay, as enlisted men of the Navy.

Privates regularly detailed as cooks receive, in addition to their pay, the following: First-class cooks, $10 per month; second-class cooks, $8; third-class cooks, $7, and fourth-class cooks, $5.

Enlisted men qualifying as expert riflemen receive additional $3 per month; sharpshooters, $2 per month; marksmen, $1 per month.

Twenty per cent increase on pay of enlisted men serving beyond the limits of the States comprising the Union and the Territories of the United States contiguous thereto (excepting Porto Rico and Hawaii) as provided by act approved June 30, 1902, the time of such service to be counted from date of departure from said States to the date of return thereto.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask, before the matter passes from the consideration of the Senate—I shall then be glad to answer any question—that 500 extra copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Maine a question concerning the Naval Academy. He was calling attention to the fact that there are in the academy and at sea something over 1,100 midshipmen.

Mr. HALE. Eleven hundred and sixty-four.

Mr. GALLINGER. Eleven hundred and sixty-four. As I remember the matter, a few years ago—not many years ago—each member of the two Houses of Congress was permitted to nominate or to recommend an additional midshipman; but is not that law limited to a certain number of years? Will we not soon reach the time when, unless there is further legislation on the subject, we shall fall back to the appointment of a much less number than we are now permitted to appoint?

Mr. HALE. That did not by any means escape my observation. The trouble with that legislation is that this pouring of this vast tide of new men into the lower ranks lasts until 1913.

Mr. GALLINGER. Until 1913?

Mr. HALE. I had the impression that it only lasted until 1909 or 1911, but on examination I find that it lasts until 1913.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator that it was my impression that it did not extend beyond 1909. If it extends to 1913 there is manifestly necessity for some action on the part of Congress.

Mr. HALE. There will be six more of these big 1913 classes.

Mr. GALLINGER. It occurs to me in that connection to suggest that I do not think it good policy for the Government to expend at Annapolis ten or fifteen million dollars to construct beautiful buildings in which to educate young men (certainly not unless they are poor young men) for the pursuits of private life; and I do hope that some legislation will be enacted that will confine the appropriation of public money for the Navy to the needs of the Navy, and not to give young men a liberal education at the expense of the Government, and then send them out into private life. I do not think that good policy.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine whether, in the consideration of this bill by the Naval Committee, he expects that committee to go into the question of construction and unfitness of our battle ships which has been raised by articles in magazines, which most undoubtedly have been inspired by naval officers? I do not understand what the President means in his recently published letter to the Secretary of the Navy denouncing Admiral Brownson, unless it is by inuendo and insinuation to bring in question the action of other naval officers than Admiral Brownson in regard to the construction of our battle ships. The Senators who have not read Reuterdahl's article in McClure's Magazine would very certainly get a great deal of light, or supposed light, on the imperfections and utter uselessness of our ships. There are charges made in that article which need to be set at rest forever by some authoritative utterance from some source competent to pass upon it; for if we are building ships which are to soon go into the scrap heap, we ought to know it. I want to know of the Senator from Maine whether, in the consideration of this bill, which deals largely with the personnel and pay of the Navy and such matters, we shall have the opportunity to get at all the facts so as to find out just why Admiral Brownson resigned. The President has given his version of it, but for some reason or other, although the President is a great stickler for "a square deal," he does not give Admiral Brownson's own version of the matter. I think there are enough questions involved in regard to the Navy in this recent transaction and in the bill, which has been drawn with such care by the chairman of the Naval Committee, to make it worth our while to get at the root of these things. I simply wanted to know from the head of the committee whether, when the committee meets, we shall be permitted—those of us of the minority, or those of the majority who may agree with us—to have the facts brought out.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator, first, that I hope in the Naval Committee there will not be any question of minority and majority. The Senator knows—he is a veteran and a most valuable member of the committee—that we have always acted in entire harmony and in solid body, and I hope we shall do so now.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope so, too; but I just simply did not want to be estopped myself from trying to get some witnesses before the committee whenever we began the consideration of the bill, and to ask those witnesses certain questions.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I merely wish to add, Mr. President, that I should hate to be the man to get in the way of the Senator when he wants to get a witness in. I have no doubt he will gladly be allowed to do so, and that his witnesses will be received.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will excuse me for interrupting at this point, before he leaves what he has been discussing, I should be glad if, at some time or in some way, it could be brought out whether the precedents cited by the President in his letter are precedents that should be given the weight that are attached to them by the President in that communication. They impressed me as of very great importance. I know nothing about what the record will show as to any one of them, but it seems to me that the President had relied upon those precedents, and that it would be well for us at some time to be advised as to the nature of them and the circumstances under which those precedents were made. Therefore I hope that the request of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] may at some time be complied with to the extent, at least, of giving us light on the important points made.

Mr. HALE. The point raised by the Senator from Ohio I can answer very squarely and promptly. The bill reads:

Provided, That this provision shall in no case carry with it command over any vessel of the Navy Department; but such command shall be exercised only by line officers.

That can not be considered by the committee without going into all the questions touched upon by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. I understand the provision of the bill as the Senator read it; it is very plain. I do not know what the precedents may be. Of course, the Senator will go into that.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly. When the committee meets to consider this bill, which relates to the personnel of the Navy and which is not an investigation into certain things or certain scandals or certain criticisms, whether the committee shall go into that I can not say, and the Senator from South Carolina, an old member of that committee, I suppose himself can not say. The committee must settle how far it will go.

I shall be in favor of great amplitude being given to the discussion in the committee of the provisions of this bill. We can settle then and there whether we will, in connection with this bill or by an investigation upon a Senatorial resolution of the special facts in such cases, go into that very important question of the wholesale criticisms which have been made of the Department and the charges which have been made and the scandals almost that are connected with it. I do not think we shall get through this session, discussing the Navy and all the other questions coming up, without having a pretty general and wide airing of all these subjects. I do not want to foreclose the Senator from South Carolina from introducing the resolution that he intimated he might submit, but I would prefer that he wait until the committee can, at least preliminarily, consider this bill, and then see what he thinks is needed to bring out the facts he is after.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, my only purpose was to call the Senator's attention and the Senate's attention to the fact that under ordinary conditions, unless the committee have an appropriation bill to consider, we meet but once a week, on Tuesdays, and if we undertake at this session to investigate the various phases of this controversy, which, I must say, is one of the most important that this Congress can have before it, unless the committee meet oftener than once a week, we shall not have an opportunity to get at the facts and be in a condition to determine ourselves what we want. That was why I asked the Senator whether he, as chairman of the committee, would cast the great influence he possesses, not only with the committee, but with the Senate, in behalf of light. We all want light. We have had so many charges and countercharges and so many things that are unpleasant and more or less disgraceful that I must confess I want to get some witnesses and ask them some questions. But with the assurance of the Senator that he himself is of the same view, I shall for the present have nothing more to say about a resolution of inquiry, but will wait and see whether the Naval Committee are of the same opinion I am and we can get what we want without such a resolution.

Mr. HALE. I move that 500 additional copies of the bill be printed for the use of the Senate and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Campbell, late clerks of the United States district courts for the Indian Territory, from May 30, 1900, to May 3, 1901, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. NELSON. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws, which was introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NELSON to the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

Amend said bill by adding an additional section thereto, as follows:

"SEC. 9. That one-third of all taxes to be paid by national banking associations upon the average amount of their notes in circulation, pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of this act, including the taxes due and payable in the month of January, A. D. 1908, shall be, and hereby is, set apart in the Treasury of the United States as a permanent special fund, termed 'Depositors' fund,' to be used and expended in paying all depositors, except the United States, the amount of their deposits in any such association that has become insolvent and for which a receiver has been appointed; and whenever any such association has become insolvent and a receiver has been appointed therefor by the Comptroller of the Currency, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, as soon as practicable, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, pay all depositors of such association, except the United States, the amount of their then subsisting deposits out of and from the said special fund; and after making such payment the United States shall, as to such deposits, be subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the depositors, and shall be entitled to recover and receive from the assets of such association all dividends and sums which the depositors would be entitled to if not paid from said special fund as aforesaid, and the amount so recovered and received shall be placed to the credit of and be a part of said special fund. Said special depositors' fund shall not be allowed to exceed the sum of $10,000,000, and all sums in excess of that amount shall be covered into the general funds of the Treasury."

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF THREE COMPANIES OF TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. WARREN. On behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent that the committee may have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. The Senate will remember that during the last session the committee was called upon to take up for investigation the Brownsville affray, so called. It has worked diligently throughout the year and had hoped to make a report to the Senate at the opening of the session. It finds that other witnesses must be examined, and in order to conduct the matter expeditiously we should have consent to sit during the sessions of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to that end.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent to be relieved from further service on the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that he may be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROPOSED TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that immediately after the morning business on the 29th of January I shall submit to the Senate some remarks upon the tariff commission bill which I introduced Tuesday, or upon that general subject. I think it appropriate to repeat what I said last Tuesday, when introducing the bill, that I am not wedded to any particular measure, but to the idea of some measure which will discover the facts necessary for all of us to act upon. If any one of the large number of bills which will undoubtedly be introduced may seem better designed to this main end than my own, it shall have my earnest support.

Upon the date given I shall submit some remarks upon the general subject.

GRAZING UPON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the amendment which I submitted on the 7th instant, intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 2968) providing for the control of grazing upon the public lands in the arid States and Territories of the United States, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF ASSISTANT CLERK.

Mr. KEAN submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the conference minority of the Senate be, and it hereby is, authorized to employ an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise authorized by law, at the rate of $1,800 per annum.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the foregoing resolution favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ELIZABETH UNDERWOOD.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth Underwood, widow of Stephen Underwood, late a laborer in the engineer's department of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 251. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907.

REVISION OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. LODGE. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I yield to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], who desires to call up the bill for the revision of the laws and have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2082) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading.

Mr. LODGE. I understand the Senator from Idaho does not desire to go on with the bill at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I only desired that it should be made the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 13, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 9, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENT.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. WEEKS to the Committee on Agriculture.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GRANGER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Elizabeth McKay, Forty-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 80. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point Mr. Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 9.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Corsica River, Maryland, and to submit a plan and estimate for its improvement.

Senate concurrent resolution 10.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made a preliminary examination and survey of the Columbia River between Priest Rapids and Wenatchee, State of Washington, with a view to open-channel work, the necessary expense of the same to be paid from the fund for examinations, surveys, and contingencies.

Senate concurrent resolution 11.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 3,000 copies of the Federal Antitrust Decisions, 1890–1906, compiled by the direction of the Department of Justice, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolution:

H. J. Res. 66. Joint resolution making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of valuable seeds.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, COUNCIL BLUFFS, IOWA.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9121) to authorize a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Central Railroad and Bridge Company of Council Bluffs, Iowa, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railway bridge and approaches therto across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and may, in connection therewith, construct and maintain a way for wagons, carriages, vehicles, street cars, animals, and foot passengers in the State of Iowa or in Iowa and Nebraska, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if this is a unanimous report?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And under the general act?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It is also under the general act.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. The gentleman asked a question, which has been satisfactorily answered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I merely asked whether it was the unanimous report of the committee and whether it was under the general law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SMITH of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BURLINGTON, IOWA.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4891) to authorize the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Burlington, Iowa, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Iowa, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad and wagon bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at Burlington, in the State of Iowa, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPRINT OF BILL.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a reprint of the bill (H. R. 2) to equalize and fix the pay of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Revenue-Cutter Service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a correction of the RECORD by having the reference of House bill 11745, which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, changed to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend section 8 of chapter 3335 of the acts of the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, entitled "An act to enable the people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory to form a constitution and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States," approved June 16, 1906, by eliminating from the provisions and operation of said act certain lands therein mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. What is the request?

The SPEAKER. The request is for a change of reference from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. KEIFER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know whether these changes of reference are always asked for in accordance with the rule. If not, I believe we ought to object. If the bill is now with the proper committee under the rule, it ought to remain there.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that after the reading of the Journal it would be in order to correct a reference by motion under certain circumstances or by unanimous consent under other circumstances. It is ordinarily done by unanimous consent. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Ohio that this bill was referred to the Committee on the Territories, as that committee had lately had charge of the legislation under which the State of Oklahoma was admitted, and that the law that had been passed under the leadership of that committee is now proposed to be amended; but in the meantime Oklahoma has become a State, and it seems to the Chair that perhaps either committee would have jurisdiction. So that if it is the sense of the House, the Chair sees no objection to the change.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not object to correcting the reference at this time. The question with me is whether the reference has been incorrect. If the bill has been properly referred, then I think it ought not to be changed under the claim that it is a correction of the RECORD, because the subject must justify sending it to one committee or the other without saying.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that this bill was referred to the Committee on the Territories somewhat hastily, as bills have to be referred where there are a great many introduced daily, by the Clerk at the Speaker's desk, while the Speaker makes the reference. Under ordinary practice, unless it is brought to the attention of the Speaker, references are made by the Speaker through the Clerk at the Speaker's table. Now, the reference was made of this bill to the Committee on the Territories because that committee had recently had charge of a bill which was enacted and which this bill now seeks to amend.

But in the meantime Oklahoma has become a State, and the Chair inclines to the belief, attention having been called to it, that the bill might with great propriety be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and that it probably ought to have been referred there in the first instance.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, in view of your statement with reference to this particular case, I withdraw my objection; but I want it understood that I do object to a mere change of reference for convenience, when the reference is made to the proper committee under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the change of reference will be made as requested.

ROOMS IN HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois calls up the special order, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Thursday, the 9th day of January, 1908, immediately after the reading of the Journal, the names of the Members of the House entitled to be allotted rooms shall be called by the Clerk in the order and manner provided by Rule XXXII of the House Rules regulating the drawing of seats, and a Member as his name is thus announced may immediately designate his choice of one undesignated office room by giving the temporary number thereof to the Clerk, in accordance with the plats accompanying this resolution. Any Member may be represented in his absence by a colleague. The rooms so designated by Members shall be, and are hereby, assigned to such Members, respectively, as their individual office rooms, and the room assigned to any Member in the foregoing manner or in the manner hereafter provided may be held by such Member so long as he shall remain continuously a Member or Member-elect of the House of Representatives, or until he shall relinquish the same, subject, however, to the control of the House at all times.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the method that we hope to have observed in the drawing of the rooms will be this: A marble with a number on it will be drawn, the number will be announced, and the name of the Member corresponding to that number will be announced. The Member will walk to the plats in front, at the bar of the House, there possibly being at different times a number of Members there, but not enough to make any confusion or to interfere in any way with one another.

The Member will select his room and indicate the number of it to the clerk, there being a clerk at each plat. He will indicate to the clerk the number of the room that he selects, and his name will be written across the plat on the space occupied by the room, and in addition the clerk in charge will give to the Member a slip with his name and the number of the room that he has selected. The numbers will not be called back at first, because there would be confusion in that way. Members hearing the numbers of rooms called would think that the numbers corresponding to their names had been called; but every little while we will suspend and call back the numbers of the rooms in regular order which have been selected, so that Members may be able to keep track of them on the plats.

It is hoped that as Members draw their rooms they will leave the Hall (although of course that is not required) in order that we may have order in the Hall. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that upon the conclusion of the allotment of the rooms the House shall stand adjourned without further order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to this request?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, what are you going to do when two names have been called and both Members get down to the plat at the same time and both want the same office? I know that if the gentleman from Illinois and myself both get down there and both want the same office, he is the better man and I will give way to him.

Mr. MANN. No, I would give way to the gentleman from Tennessee at all times. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman has indicated that when a Member draws his room he shall retire. Some of us here have colleagues who are not present, and the rule, as I understand it, provides that a colleague may select a room for an absent Member.

Mr. MANN. Of course it is not requisite that a Member retire, but most of the Members will naturally retire after selecting their rooms if they know that no other business is to be transacted in the House to-day. That is the reason I made the request.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Now, may I ask another question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Do I understand that when a room is selected it will be marked off of the plat there?

Mr. MANN. When a Member selects a room his name will be written across the face of the room on the plat, and he is requested in each case to give to the clerk in charge his name, and the clerk in charge will also give to the Member as an identification his name written on one of these slips with the number of the room, so that there can be no possible misunderstanding.

Mr. ADAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. ADAMSON. The difficulty suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] may easily be obviated if we proceed with sufficient deliberation so that each man, acting with ordinary diligence, can make the selection in the order in which his number is drawn.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. TALBOTT. How will Members know what rooms are taken and which are not taken?

Mr. MANN. The name of the Member who chooses a room will be written across the face of that room on the plat. Anyone who comes down here can see the rooms that have been taken.

Mr. TALBOTT. The Member comes to the front of the desk and then sees upon the plat those rooms that have already been chosen?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, who asked if two gentlemen appeared at the plat at the same time and wanted the same room, I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that the Member whose name was first called would have the choice?

Mr. MANN. The man who first announces his choice of a room will take the room.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems to me that it would be an act of justice to give the man whose name was first called the first choice.

Mr. MANN. The man whose name is first called will rise and state his choice of a room, and of course he will have the first chance. The names will not be called fast; it will probably take all the afternoon to complete the drawing. There will be plenty of time, and it is inconceivable to me that any two gentlemen will quarrel about the choice of a room when there are 400 rooms to choose from. [Applause.]

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. I will.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Is it understood that Members will keep their seats until their names are called?

Mr. MANN. It is understood that if Members whose names are not called go down to the bar in front of the desk I will rise and demand that they take their seats, as the rule provides.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Why would not the simplest and best way be to call ten names and then pause and let those ten announce their choice of rooms? [Cries of "Oh, no! Oh, no!"]

Mr. MANN. We think the other way will be simpler and quicker. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my request be preferred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois requests that at the conclusion of the drawings of the rooms the House stand adjourned. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. I will now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that instead of ten names being drawn, let one name be drawn and then that Member announce his choice from his desk.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion in the House that we can not hear one word the gentleman says.

Mr. MANN. The very demand made for order by the gentleman from Iowa is a clear indication that the method proposed by the gentleman from New York would result in so much confusion in fifteen minutes that nobody could tell what was being done. The method proposed by the rule will give every Member of the House a fair opportunity to choose his room, and to know what rooms are chosen ahead of him. If we should follow the method proposed by the gentleman from New York, we have figured out that it would take several days to complete the drawing.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, it does not seem so to me.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman from New York has not figured this out.

Mr. PAYNE. I am suggesting it from a disinterested standpoint, and I think that instead of drawing ten names and then having the numbers of the rooms announced, it would be better to have one drawn and then that choice announced before proceeding to the next.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Speaker, what is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the order.

The Clerk again read the order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the Doorkeeper be directed not to bring in any cards to Members during the allotment of rooms.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATKINS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WATKINS. I want to ask permission from the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order unless it be a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WATKINS. I desire to ask unanimous consent that on the selection of a room the number of it be announced in a loud and audible voice, so that we can check it off on our individual plats.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will call the first name.

The Clerk then proceeded with the call, and the Members made their selections in accordance with the order heretofore made.

At the conclusion of the drawing,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be published in the RECORD the names of the Members in alphabetical order, together with the numbers of the various rooms which they have selected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAPRON). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list is as follows:

Drawing of House rooms, January 9, 1908.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order previously made, the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of Hempstead Harbor, New York—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination of St. Josephs Bay, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in the claim of Dr. Felipe Zamora, Philippine Islands—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, except accompanying document.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a statement of civilian engineers employed in river and harbor work between July 1, 1906, and June 30, 1907—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for maintenance of naval training station at St. Helena, Va.—to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for submarine torpedo boats—to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of land for target range and other military uses near the city of Washington—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Patents, the decisions of the Commissioner of Patents and of the United States courts in patent cases for the year 1907—to the Committee on Patents and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting the report of Special Agent Charles M. Pepper on trade conditions in Colombia—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, Mr. STEENERSON, from the Committee on Militia, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 14) extending the time allowed the organized militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia to conform to the provision of section 3 of the act approved January 2, 1903, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 26), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 10, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement in reference to the House Office Building.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, for the benefit of the Members of the House, that keys to the rooms, where they have not already been given out, can be procured at room 303. Any suggestion which may be made by Members or any complaint which they desire to call attention to can also be made at room 303. I would like to add, for the benefit of the Members, that there are some things yet to be done in the new building. There are a few doors which are not yet hung, although I think they are now on the side track in the city and will be put up at once. Just as rapidly as it is possible to do it all of the rooms will be put in perfect and completed shape. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, Mr. Woods, who is in charge and who will have a person named by him at room 303, will be very glad to receive suggestions from Members in regard to their office rooms or from chairmen of committees in regard to their committee rooms.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a privileged resolution from the Committee on Banking and Currency calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information, and I will be glad to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman report the resolution from the Committee?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes, sir; it is reported unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, reports from that committee a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution 41.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives:

First. The total number of national banks in operation on November 1, 1907, and December 1, 1907, in each State and Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia. The total amount of capital stock and unimpaired surplus of such banks in each of said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia at that time.

Second. The total amount of public money in each of said national banks aforesaid in each of said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia on October 1, 1907, and December 1, 1907.

Third. The character of security required by the Government of the United States as security for the deposit of said public money of the United States in the various national banks in each of the said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia.

Also, the following committee amendment:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the House of Representatives:

First. The total number of national banks in operation on August 22, 1907, and December 3, 1907, in each State and Territory of the United States and the District of Columbia. The total amount of capital stock and unimpaired surplus of such banks in each of said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia at each of said dates.

Second. The total amount of public money in each of said national banks aforesaid in each of said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia on October 1, 1907, December 1, 1907, and January 1, 1908, respectively.

Third. The character and a list of the securities required and held by the Government of the United States as security for the deposit of said public money of the United States in the various national banks in each of the said States and Territories of the United States and the District of Columbia, on the following dates, August 22, 1907, December 3, 1907, and January 1, 1908.

Fourth. The amount of capital of each national bank, the amount of circulation authorized to be taken out by each national bank, the amount of national bank notes of each bank in actual circulation on August 22, 1907, and December 3, 1907, what banks have taken out additional circulation since the 3d day of December, 1907, to and including January 1, 1908, and in what amounts, respectively.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FOWLER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON ACCOUNTS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House for stenographic and typewriting services for the Committee on Accounts, from the beginning of the present fiscal year, in the compilation of laws, decisions, tabular statements, and debates, pursuant to the act of March 3, 1901, relative to the employment, duties, and compensation of employees of the House of Representatives, such compensation as may be deemed proper by said committee, not exceeding the rate of $75 per month.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 623. An act to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on Eliza Island, Bellingham Bay, State of Washington; and

S. 1427. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1898.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 623. An act to establish a light-house and fog-signal station on Eliza Island, Bellingham Bay, State of Washington—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce; and

S. 1427. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to protect the harbor defenses and fortifications constructed or used by the United States from malicious injury, and for other purposes," approved July 7, 1898—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 80) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy at West Point, Mr. Hernan Ulloa, of Costa Rica.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia also submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That clerks to committees of the House during the session provided for by the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, be, and they are hereby, allowed and assigned for the present Congress to the following committees, namely:

To the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk;
To the Committee on Education, a clerk;
To the Committee on Militia, a clerk;
To the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk;
To the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk;
To the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk;
To the Committee on Levees and Improvements of the Mississippi River, a clerk;
To the Committee on the Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress, a clerk;
To the Committee on Accounts, an assistant clerk;
To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, an assistant clerk.

The question was submitted, and the resolution was agreed to.

STENOGRAPHER TO COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia also submitted the following resolution:

House resolution 35.

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions be authorized to appoint a stenographer for said committee for the Sixtieth Congress, at a salary of $6 per day, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

The pay of said stenographer shall commence from the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairman of said committee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SECOND HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 300) providing for second homestead entries.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 300) providing for second homestead entries.

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who, prior to the passage of this act, has made entry under the homestead laws, but from any cause has lost or forfeited the same, shall be entitled to the benefits of the homestead law as though such former entry had not been made, and any person applying for a second homestead under this act shall furnish the description and date of his former entry.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman some questions about the bill. In the first place, is it a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. GRONNA. I would say, in reply to the gentleman, that it is a unanimous report of the full committee, and has the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman please explain the intendment of the bill to the House?

Mr. GRONNA. I have sent a copy of the report up to the Clerk, and I will ask him to read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest to the gentleman that he explain it, and the House will be very much better pleased.

Mr. GRONNA. I will yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the intent of the bill can be very briefly explained. It is a bill allowing those who prior to the passage of the bill made an attempt to secure a homestead, but have failed to do so, to make another homestead filing. This legislation is identical in language with an act passed in 1900, and practically the same as an act passed in 1889. It has been the custom at intervals to provide that where homesteaders have been unable to complete proof and obtain title they shall be given an opportunity for another trial to make a home on the public land. That is all that is embraced in the matter. It is in line of former legislation, and no objection to it is offered by the Interior Department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be very glad to.

Mr. MANN. It has been suggested at times that a good many people who have made homestead entries have lost them by reason of fraud found by the Department. Now, suppose some man who has made a homestead entry, and in making it has endeavored to perpetrate a fraud, and his claim, as you describe it, was lost, is he to be given an opportunity to commit another fraud by reason of this law?

Mr. MONDELL. Why, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Will that be the effect if this measure becomes law?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the cases in which men lose homestead entries through fraud are comparatively rare. No such objection as the gentleman offers has been offered by the Interior Department, which is exceedingly careful in these matters. They have heretofore operated under the law of 1889, which is similar, and under the law of 1900, which is identical in language, and they see no objection to the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANN. If there is a law already in force, what is the object of this law?

Mr. MONDELL. The law of 1889 gave those who had made the attempt to secure homesteads prior to 1889 an opportunity to try again; the law of 1900 gave those who had prior to 1900 made an effort but lost their homestead to try again. Now, this will cover the intervening period.

Mr. MANN. But this would cover prior to 1900 and prior to any other time?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, certainly; it would cover anything prior to its passage, but a man who attempted to take a homestead before 1889 and lost it can come under that legislation. The man who made the effort prior to former legislation and failed does not need this legislation, because he still can take advantage of the former legislation. It is only the man who has made the effort since 1890 and failed who requires this legislation.

Mr. MANN. Then, there would be no harm in putting that exception into this bill, and also in putting in a provision that if the forfeiture is by reason of fraud committed the applicant shall not have the right to make a new entry. Now, would the gentleman be willing to amend his bill in that way?

Mr. MONDELL. Just a moment, if the gentleman will allow me. The difficulty with the gentleman's proposition of amendment, as I understand it, is this: How are you going to determine, and who is going to determine, the question involved? Are you going to compel every entryman who comes up to make a second homestead entry, who has never obtained title to land under the homestead law, who has made an effort in the drought-stricken regions of the West or Southwest, and failed——

Mr. MANN. I thought there were none.

Mr. MONDELL. The man who has failed and lost his all; how is the gentleman going to compel him to prove conclusively that there was by no possibility any fraud in his original entry?

Mr. MANN. That is not my suggestion at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I will remind the gentleman again that the Departments are careful, sometimes overcareful, in the execution of the law, and certainly the Department having knowledge of the effect of the law of 1899, and having administered the law of 1900, would not favor legislation of the same character if they felt that they were, by this legislation, allowing any one a homestead who ought not to have it.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all we propose to do is to give a man a right to get a homestead who has never obtained one.

Mr. MANN. That is all the gentleman desires to do, but I am afraid that is not all he does do. Does the Department, when it forfeits a homestead entry, give any reason for it?

Mr. MONDELL. Homestead entries are lost or forfeited in the regions where men find it difficult to comply with the law and make proof, generally by abandonment.

Mr. MANN. Yes, generally, but sometimes directly by the Department.

I suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw his request for unanimous consent, and fix that provision of the bill so that it shall not be possible for men who have forfeited their homestead rights through fraud, found by the Land Office, to endeavor to impose upon the Government again.

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly the gentleman has a right to object to unanimous consent for consideration.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason why the gentleman from Illinois made the suggestion to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment the gentleman suggests has never been considered necessary in any former legislation.

Mr. MANN. No; and the fraud has continued.

Mr. MONDELL. In the minds largely of gentlemen who do not know anything about the conditions surrounding the public lands.

Mr. MANN. Of course the gentleman from Illinois is not personally familiar. The information which I have on the subject I have acquired from reading the reports of the gentlemen in charge of the Government business—the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Secretary of the Interior, the Department of Justice. It may be that they are all wrong and that the gentleman from Wyoming is correct in his notions that there is very little fraud. I do not know.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that these are homestead cases; that the Departments which the gentlemen says have called attention to the alleged frauds have themselves offered no objection to this legislation. They have been acting under similar legislation in years past. They have had no fault to find with it at any time. They have no fault to find with it now, as indicated in a letter written to the committee.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. BONYNGE. Are not the cases of fraud which the gentleman refers to cases arising under the timber and stone act and the coal-land laws and not under the homestead laws?

Mr. MANN. Oh, they arise under all the laws. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall object.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection for a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think I can amend it, if the gentleman insists——

Mr. MANN. Well, amend it, and then bring it into the House to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. We can amend in a few words, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman insists.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can consult with the gentleman from Illinois, and he can again call up the bill. He can be recognized for that purpose later.

BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER AT CELINA, TENN.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10519, to authorize the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across Cumberland River at Celina, Tenn.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River at Celina, in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, at the end of line 7, insert "or near."

Amend the title by inserting in line 2, after the word "at," "or near."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if this bill has been reported by a committee?

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. It is reported unanimously by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HULL of Tennessee, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS SNAKE RIVER IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I again call up the bill H. R. 7618, to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River in the State of Washington. I understand the gentleman from Mississippi will not object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Benton Water Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Washington, its successors or assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Snake River at or near Fivemile Rapids, in the State of Washington, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters," approved June 21, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from Washington give me probably fifteen minutes' time to have the Clerk read to the House a letter and some resolutions of the citizens of Two Rivers, in that neighborhood, against the passage of the bill. I do not feel like objecting to the consideration, Mr. Speaker, if that leave is granted me, because I think that full duty will be done if objections are read to the House and stated so that the House may consider the bill on its merits.

The SPEAKER. If unanimous consent is given, the bill will be before the House for consideration. Is there objection to the present consideration?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not if I am granted the time I ask for.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that unanimous consent is given for the present consideration of the bill and, as the Chair understands, the gentleman from Washington takes the floor and yields to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now request the Clerk to read to the House, and I ask the House to listen to a letter of Jacob Moser, of Two Rivers, in Washington, written in opposition to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

TWO RIVERS, WASH., December 31, 1907.

Congressman JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,

DEAR SIR: I send you herewith a copy of some resolutions recently adopted by the citizens of this place and vicinity in mass convention assembled, which gives reasons why a grant to the Benton Water Company of the right to construct a dam across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids, as asked for by a bill introduced in Congress in the interest of that company, would create a monopoly of the water-power possibilities of this section of the country, and would enable it to lay a heavy hand upon and exact extortionate tribute of agricultural, manufacturing, and transportation enterprises of the section. These resolutions ask for the construction of such a dam by the Government, or, if not that, then by a private company under such restrictions as would give to the country the most beneficial use of the water power that would thereby be produced, and enable the Government to regulate the rates such a company might charge consumers of power or water users for water rights. By means of a portion of the power from such a dam many thousand acres of arid land about the confluence of Snake and Columbia rivers could be irrigated and become very productive, and the necessary power required for the irrigation of these lands could be disposed of therefor for enough to pay for the entire cost of such a dam, and there would be abundance of power left that would be worth several millions of dollars and that could accomplish much for the upbuilding of this section of the country. Henry Villard, the great railroad builder of his time, who built the Northern Pacific Railroad, once said that if ever means be found of making productive the lands about the confluence of Snake and Columbia rivers, there would then arise in that vicinity the largest inland city of the Northwest. Henry Villard has passed beyond with this prediction unfulfilled and with an inland city built up in the Northwest (Spokane) which has a population of about 100,000 people, but these lands have not yet been made productive, and a dam across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids has not been constructed to develop a water power that could be put to the many purposes possible. This dam would greatly improve Snake River as a national water highway, if locks be constructed in connection with such a dam. We hope to see the time when Columbia and Snake rivers will be developed as national water highways, and so developed by means of dams thereacross as incidents thereto that water power will be available for the construction and operation of electric railroads to these rivers as trunk lines of water transportation from surrounding towns and cities off of these streams, where most of the traffic in the basins of these large rivers originates, to serve as branches and feeders of traffic to these trunk lines of water transportation, and that such water powers can not fall into the hands of railroad companies to prevent competition and make these rivers practically useless as water highways or into the hands of monopolies and trusts; and that such water powers will be serviceable for manufacturing enterprises and for the irrigation of many thousands of acres of arid land, to give homes to many, and to develop the resources of the country and to add to the wealth and prosperity of the nation. The Democrats of this section favor these resolutions and would much prefer the construction of such a dam by the Government than by a private company, and oppose the construction of such a dam by a private company unless under such rules and regulations as will enable the Government to acquire for the country the most beneficial use of the water power produced and to regulate the rates that may be charged consumers of power or water users for water rights for arid lands. So, on behalf of the Democrats of this section, and as a Democrat, I write you as the leader of the Democrats of the House, to oppose the bill introduced, unless at least proper restrictions be made for the purposes mentioned, and secure, if possible, the construction of such a dam by the Government. The resolutions provide, as you will observe, for an investigation as to the feasibility of this dam and its importance to the country before construction shall be undertaken. If nothing more than an investigation, as called for by these resolutions, be obtained, we think considerable will be accomplished for this section of the country.

Thanking you for what consideration you may be able to give to the subject-matter of these resolutions, and for what attention and assistance you may be able to give in this matter, I am, most respectfully,

Yours, truly,

JACOB MOSER.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to listen while the Clerk reads certain resolutions adopted by the citizens of Wallawalla County in the State of Washington, in mass convention assembled, against the passage of that bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolutions adopted by citizens of and about Two Rivers, Wallawalla County, Wash., in mass convention assembled, petitioning Congress for the construction, by the Government instead of by the Benton Water Company, of a dam with locks across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids.

(1) That thereby this river may be greatly improved as a national water highway;

(2) That thereby, in connection with power and pumping plants, over 40,000 acres of arid land in Wallawalla, Franklin, and Benton counties, Wash., may be irrigated by irrigation districts;

(3) That thereby power will be available for the construction and operation of electric railroads to Snake and Columbia rivers as branch feeders thereto from wheat-producing sections of the Northwest;

(4) That thereby power will be available for various manufacturing and industrial enterprises referred to;

And setting forth reasons why a grant to the Benton Water Company of a right to construct such a dam and possess the water power thereby produced, as asked for by a bill introduced in Congress, would create a monopoly of the water-power possibilities of the section and enable it to lay a heavy hand upon and exact extortionate tribute of agricultural, manufacturing, and transportation enterprises of the section.

(1) Whereas a bill has been introduced in Congress to grant to the Benton Water Company the right to construct a dam across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids, together with the right to develop and enjoy the water power that would thereby be produced, without, as we are informed, any provision as to what uses such power shall be put to, or any provisions that would enable the Government to secure the most beneficial uses thereof, and without, as we are informed, any provisions that would enable the Government to regulate the rates that may be charged by such company to consumers of such power;

(2) Whereas the Chamber of Commerce, of Franklin County, Wash., and the Pasco Commercial Club, of Pasco, Wash., have adopted resolutions that Congress be asked to grant to the Benton Water Company, or any responsible company, the right to construct such a dam, together with the right to develop and enjoy the water power that would thereby be produced, if satisfactory assurance be given to the Government that it is financially able to construct such a dam and to develop the water power that would thereby be produced, but under such conditions and upon such terms as would secure (1) the construction of such a dam, together with locks in connection therewith, within a reasonably limited time, and the continuous maintenance and operation thereof, by such company, its successors or assigns, in a manner that navigation of Snake River would thereby be improved and not impeded, and (2) the use of such locks by vessels free from tolls, and (3) a right in a governmental agency to direct the uses such power may be put to, so that the most beneficial use thereof will be obtained for the country, and (4) a right of control by the Government of the rates that may be charged by such company, its successors or assigns, to consumers of such power, so that such company, its successors or assigns, may receive reasonably fair profits on investments, but can not become a trust or monopoly of the water power of this section of the country to lay a heavy toll upon or exact extortionate tribute of transportation, agricultural, manufacturing, or industrial enterprises of the section;

(3) Whereas President Roosevelt has recommended to Congress that the Mississippi and Columbia river systems be developed as national water highways, and that, "as incidents to such development, Government dams be used to produce thousands of horsepower;"

(4) Whereas a 20-foot dam with locks just below the Fivemile Rapids of Snake River would, by backing and deepening the water thereabove, remove these rapids, together with several other rapids above, as obstructions to navigation of this water highway in seasons of low water, and would do much toward the development of this stream as a national water highway, and would, as an incident to such development, create a water power of 20,000 or more of horsepower of a value that would exceed several times the cost of such a dam and locks and the development of such power;

(5) Whereas the cost of such a dam and locks and development of the water power that would thereby be created would probably not exceed $1,000,000;

(6) Whereas some of the horsepower that would be produced by such a dam could make possible the construction and operation of electric railroads to the Snake and Columbia rivers, which would be branches and feeders to these trunk lines of water transportation from the neighboring towns and cities of the inland empire that are off of these streams and where most of the traffic of this vast section of country originates;

(7) Whereas electric railroads as aforesaid, in connection with these water highways, would give additional and cheaper transportation to much of the wheat produced in the Northwest and to considerable other traffic of the inland empire, and would give to this section of country relief from the present congestion of traffic on the transcontinental lines traversing it, and would enable this section to increase its production and further develop its great resources, and would help to regulate the rates of transportation in the Northwest, and would by handling considerable traffic, enable these transcontinental railroads to give better service to and handle more traffic from other sections of the country that are not traversed by navigable rivers;

(8) Whereas some of the horsepower that would be produced by such a dam could doubtless in time, if the Snake and Columbia rivers be developed as national highways, and if electric railroads be constructed and operated thereto as branches and feeders thereof from the wheat fields of the Northwest, enable a large portion of the wheat produced in the Northwest to be manufactured into flour and milling stuffs in the towns about the confluence of the Snake River with the Columbia River, considering (1) That the greater portion by far of the wheat produced in the Northwest passes through these towns from the fields of production to the markets of consumption, thereby giving to these places for milling purposes a great quantity and variety of wheat to draw from; (2) That water power produced by such a dam could be available therefor, and could be cheaply sold to milling interests of the Northwest; and (3) That by means of such electric railroads and these water highways as aforesaid this wheat could come to these towns at a cheap rate of transportation, and could, on being manufactured into flour and milling stuffs, be cheaply transported in such forms from these towns down upon the Columbia River to the markets of consumption; and (4) That more of this wheat is apt to be ground into flour as the Northwest develops by means of irrigation and otherwise and as Alaska and oriental trade in this article increases; and (5) That, with cheaper transportation and water power, more of the wheat of the Northwest could be ground into flour and milling stuffs, as a few cents difference in the price of flour makes quite a difference in the quantity consumed in the oriental markets;

(9) Whereas some of the horsepower that would be produced by such a dam could be used in the surrounding towns for lighting, manufacturing, and other industrial purposes that now are prevented by the high price of coal in the Northwest.

(10) Whereas some of the horsepower that would be produced by such a dam could, in connection with pumping plants operating under low lifts, enable many thousands of acres of the low-lying arid lands along the Columbia River, situated in Franklin, Wallawalla, and Benton counties, Wash., to be irrigated and become the homes of many families, where by irrigation sugar beets could be raised and sugar manufactured therefrom to lessen the importation of that product from foreign countries, and where by irrigation such products as alfalfa, corn, fruits, and garden truck could be profitably raised to increase the agricultural wealth of the country;

(11) Whereas in the vicinity of the town of Two Rivers, in the western part of Wallawalla County, Wash., there are, exclusive of lands under the Columbia Canal Company's irrigation canal from the Wallawalla River, about 20,000 acres of arid land that could be irrigated by means of a power and pumping plant at Fivemile Rapids and by a small portion of the water power that would be produced by such a dam, as there are about 8,000 acres of these lands under an elevation of 45 feet above the waters of Snake River at these rapids, and about 5,000 acres more under an elevation of 85 feet, and about 7,000 acres more under an elevation of 150 feet, particularly as such a dam would itself raise the water to be pumped 20 feet and thereby decrease these elevations to 25, 65, and 130 feet, respectively;

(12) Whereas in the vicinity of the town of Pasco, of Franklin County, Wash., there are about 22,500 acres of arid land that could be irrigated by means of a power and pumping plant at Fivemile

Rapids and by a small portion of the water power that would be produced by such a dam, as there are about 5,000 acres of these lands under an elevation of 55 feet above the waters of Snake River at Fivemile Rapids, and about 4,000 acres more under an elevation of 75 feet, and about 6,500 acres more under an elevation of 100 feet, and about 7,000 acres more under an elevation of 150 feet, particularly as such a dam would decrease the lifts required for these lands to 35, 55, 80, and 130 feet, respectively;

(13) Whereas there are in Benton County, Wash., several thousand acres of arid land that could be irrigated by pumping plants and a small portion of the power that would be produced by such a dam, if such power be transformed into electrical energy and thereupon transmitted a few miles to pumping plants in the vicinity of these lands;

(14) Whereas there are many thousands of acres in Franklin and Wallawalla counties that lie between the 150 and 200 foot elevations which possibly should be irrigated by means of a power and pumping plant at Fivemile Rapids;

(15) Whereas these 20,000 acres of land in the vicinity of Two Rivers, if irrigated, would be as valuable per acre as the neighboring lands under the canal of the Columbia Canal Company, which, with water rights from such company, sell for from $150 to $200 per acre in their unimproved state, and would, in consequence, be worth from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000, as soon as water be supplied therefor, and would, when improved, be worth from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000, and would then add that much taxable property to the county of Wallawalla;

(16) Whereas these 22,500 acres of land in the vicinity of Pasco, if irrigated, would be worth per acre as much as the neighboring lands under irrigation in the vicinity of Kennowick, Wash., which, with water rights, sell for from $150 to $200 per acre in their unimproved state, and would, in consequence, be worth from $3,375,000 to $4,500,000, as soon as water be supplied therefor, and would, when improved, be worth from $6,750,000 to $9,000,000, and would then add that much taxable property to Frankiin County, Wash.;

(17) Whereas the irrigation of these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers and Pasco that are under the 150-foot elevation, aggregating about 42,500 acres, would provide homes for many families, as doubtless in time they would be divided up in small tracts of from 5 to 40 acres each and be devoted to gardening, orcharding, dairying, etc., and would, when improved, increase the taxable property of the State by from $12,750,000 to $17,000,000, and would add that much wealth to the entire country;

(18) Whereas the irrigation of these lands in Benton County above referred to, and the lands in Franklin and Wallawalla counties above referred to as being between the 150 and 200 foot elevations, would add several millions of dollars' worth of taxable property to the State and as wealth to the country;

(19) Whereas the irrigation of these lands in the vicinity of Pasco would give relief to some of those who settled there with the expectation that the Government would carry out the Palouse irrigation project, the abandonment of which was such a sore disappointment to many;

(20) Whereas the irrigation of these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers would afford great relief to many persons who about three years ago contracted for water rights for some of these lands from the Snake River Irrigation Company, that commenced about that time the construction of a power canal and a power and pumping plant at Five-mile Rapids for the irrigation of a portion of these lands and that soon afterwards disposed of about $100,000 worth of water rights to many persons by various false and fraudulent representations as to financial ability, character, and capacity of works being undertaken, etc., as shown by the records of the superior court of Walla Walla County, Wash., and that soon afterwards failed and passed its assets, what little there were, together with its debts, to the Pasco Power and Water Company, which about two months ago as the recent financial flurry swept the country, went into the hands of a receiver with works uncompleted and with settlers, what few there are left, disheartened after waiting for water nearly three years upon practically a desert;

(21) Whereas the power canal and power and pumping plant above mentioned, if completed, would irrigate only a fractional part of these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers and could not irrigate any of these lands in the vicinity of Pasco;

(22) Whereas a private irrigation company almost invariably possesses the only available means for the irrigation of the lands in the field of its operations and as a water-right monopoly charges exorbitant rates for water rights; and as private irrigation companies as a rule, although charging excessive rates for water rights, require in the sale thereof a payment down of about 25 per cent of the purchase price and the remainder in equal annual installments within from two to four years with interest, and thereby impose heavy burdens upon the purchasers during the first few years, when great expenditures must be made by them for the improvement of their lands and when there is but little realized therefrom, particularly if set out to orchards, which burdens too often result in forfeitures of contracts with such companies and in great loss and discouragements to purchasers striving to build up homes for those dependent upon them for support, while under irrigation projects by the Federal Government and under irrigation projects by the States under the Carey Act these burdens of payments on the cost of water rights are required to be met principally after the lands thereunder are brought to a state of production and income-bearing property, and while under irrigation projects by irrigation districts formed under State laws therefor these burdens are postponed entirely by the issuance of long-time bonds for the construction of the necessary irrigation works, excepting the payments of interest of these bonds, until the lands are producing and in a high state of improvement and development, when these burdens can easily be met; and as private irrigation companies often dispose of more water rights than the capacity of their works can satisfy, thereby causing much trouble among the water users in their efforts to produce their crops; and as private irrigation companies are sometimes used as instrumentalities to serve methods of high financing that would be instructive to even some of the experienced manipulators of Wall street;

(23) Whereas these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers can be irrigated only by a power and pumping plant at Fivemile Rapids; and as this is also true respecting these lands in the vicinty of Pasco if concluded by the Government the Palouse irrigation project be not practicable;

(24) Whereas a gift to a private company by the Government of such a valuable franchise as the right to construct such a dam and possess the power created thereby would place the irrigation of these lands at the will of such company, for the power developed therefrom could, as far as the Government or the owners of these lands were concerned, be used for many purposes other than for irrigation, unless the Government would in its grant to such company impose as a condition thereof that the Government may direct the uses such power may be put to, so as to secure the most beneficial uses thereof;

(25) Whereas a private company possessed of such a water power, even though required to devote a sufficient amount thereof for the irrigation of these lands, would practically be a water-power monopoly in this section of the country, considering (1) that a dam across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids would, on account of the low grades of this stream, back the water for miles, and (2) that the occupancy of both banks of this river by railroads from Riparia to its mouth will prevent the construction of any dam near its mouth, excepting one at Fivemile Rapids, and (3) that, were it possible to develop a water power a good number of miles from this vicinity, such power would have to be transformed into electrical power, transmitted to this section, and then transformed back to mechanical power, all of which would be at a great expense; and as a monopoly of the water power of the section such company would probably charge excessive rates for water rights, in case it should go into the irrigation business, or excessive rates for power to irrigation districts or private companies as consumers of such power, unless the Government should in its grant reserve the right of control at all times of the rates that may be charged consumers of power or for water rights for these lands;

(26) Whereas these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers could well afford, under an irrigation district, to bear, if necessary, the entire cost of such a dam, for and in consideration of a sufficient amount of power therefrom for their irrigation, in addition to the cost of the power and pumping plant and of the system of irrigation canals that would be necessary, even though in order to do so it would be necessary or desirable to take over by purchase or condemnation the works of the Pasco Power and Water Company at their value or at what has been expended thereon, considering (1) that the irrigation of these lands would give to them a value of from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000, without taking into consideration any value that may be imparted thereto by work or improvements thereon; (2) that by these lands bearing the entire cost thereof water rights for these lands would probably not cost more than $50 per acre, and (3) that if these lands be irrigated by a private company constructing such a dam and owning the water power thereby produced, these lands would probably be required to pay about $100 per acre, as the Pasco Power and Water Company valued water rights at that figure;

(27) Whereas these lands in the vicinity of Pasco could well afford, under an irrigation district, to bear, if necessary, the entire cost of such a dam for and in consideration of a sufficient amount of power therefrom for their irrigation in addition to the cost of the power and pumping plant and of the system of irrigation canals that would be necessary, considering (1) that the irrigation of these lands would give to them a value of from $3,375,000 to $4,500,000, without taking into consideration any value that may be imparted thereto by work or improvements thereon; (2) that by these lands bearing the entire cost thereof water rights for these lands would probably not cost more than $50 per acre; and (3) that if these lands be irrigated by a private company constructing such a dam and owning the power thereby created these lands would probably be required to pay about $100 per acre;

(28) Whereas these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers, together with these lands in the vicinity of Pasco, could well afford, if necessary, to bear the entire cost of such a dam for and in consideration of a sufficient amount of power therefrom for their irrigation, in addition to the cost of necessary power and pumping plants and systems of irrigation canals, considering (1) that the irrigation thereof would give to them a combined value of from $6,375,000 to $8,500,000, without taking into consideration any value that may be imparted thereto by work or improvements thereon; (2) that by bearing together this entire cost water rights for these lands would probably cost not exceeding from $25 to $30 per acre; and (3) that if these lands be irrigated by a private company constructing such a dam and owning the water power thereby created these lands would be required to pay probably at least $100 per acre and possibly more;

(29) Whereas the Government could well afford to construct this dam with locks and develop the power thereby created as demands therefor arise and dispose of a sufficient amount of such power for the irrigation of these lands in the vicinity of Two Rivers, or these lands in the vicinity of Pasco, or both such lands, for and in consideration of the entire cost of such dam, if for not a less sum, and take bonds of such district or districts as may be formed in payment for such power, considering that the irrigation of these lands would require but a small portion of the power that would be produced by such a dam and that the remainder of such power would be worth several millions of dollars, and that with such remaining portion some of the great benefits above referred to could in time be obtained for the country, and that by such dam the navigation of Snake River would be greatly benefited;

(30) Whereas the policy of our country has always been to encourage agricultural development, foster manufacturing enterprise to convert raw material into finished products, improve navigation, and help to increase transportation facilities, and to prevent, control, or cure, where possible, trusts and monopolies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the citizens in and about Two Rivers, Wash., in mass convention assembled: (1) That Congress be asked to provide that an inland waterways commission or other governmental agency shall make an investigation respecting the feasibility of the construction of a dam across Snake River at Fivemile Rapids as an incident toward the development of this national water highway, and respecting the importance and value of such a dam toward the improvement of this highway and toward the development of the resources of the country to add to its wealth and prosperity; and that Congress be asked to provide that such commission or agency, if it deems the construction of such dam is feasible, and if it considers the importance and value thereof as an incident toward the development of this highway will warrant its construction, shall (1) determine the exact location, character, and size this dam should have, and (2) prepare plans, specifications, and estimates therefor, and (3) determine the probable amount of horsepower that would be produced thereby, and (4) determine the importance of the water power it would produce toward encouraging agricultural development, toward fostering manufacturing enterprises, and toward increasing transportation facilities, and (5) determine what, if any, arrangements can be made with any irrigation district or districts for the purpose of securing the irrigation of the lands above referred to, or portions thereof, and (6) determine what, if any, arrangements can be made with persons or companies to secure some of the great benefits above mentioned, and (7) prepare plans, specifications, and estimates for the development of this water power, or for such portions thereof as may be needed from time to time.

(2) That Congress be asked to authorize and enable such commission or agency, if such commission or agency considers the construction of such a dam is feasible and warranted as aforesaid, to construct the same for and on behalf of the Government as an incident to the development of Snake River as a national water highway, of a form that will readily admit of the development of the water power that would thereby be produced, and to develop such water power or portions thereof from time to time as may in the judgment of such commission or agency be needed, and to dispose of by grant or lease such water power or portions thereof, or the power that may be developed therefrom, or portions thereof, under such rules and regulations that Congress or such commission or agency may adopt as will be calculated to improve navigation, and to secure the most beneficial use of such power, and to enable such commission or agency to regulate at all times the rates that may be charged by the Government's grantee or lessee to consumers of such power, and to enable such commission or agency, in cases where the Government's grantee or lessee, instead of selling power for irrigation purposes to irrigation districts or private irrigation companies, shall engage in the business of an irrigation company, to regulate at all times the rates that such grantee or lessee may charge water users for water rights for their lands; and that Congress be asked to authorize such commission or agency, in case of sale of power or water to any irrigation district or districts that may be formed under the laws of the State of Washington, to accept bonds of such district or districts in payment for such power or water, as doubtless a sufficient amount of such bonds could be obtained that the value thereof would construct such dam, and as the Government could soon dispose of the same probably, drawing 6 per cent interest as they would, and as, unless the Government would take such bonds in settlement for power or water for irrigation purposes, it may be that such irrigation district or districts could not dispose of its bonds in the money markets, considering the present financial stringency, and that in consequence these lands would have to be irrigated by private irrigation companies.

(3) That, in case Congress should not approve of the construction of such a dam by the Government, then Congress be asked to authorize such commission or agency, if in the opinion of such commission or agency the construction of such dam is advisable, to allow the Benton Water Company or any irrigation district or districts or any responsible company to construct such dam and develop the power thereby produced and possess and enjoy the same, on assurance given of financial ability to complete the same, but under such conditions, rules, and regulations that may be adopted by Congress or such commission or agency as will be calculated to improve navigation, secure the most beneficial use of the power produced by such a dam, and that will enable such commission or agency to regulate at all times the rates that may be charged to consumers of such power, together with rates that may be charged water users for water rights for irrigation purposes; and that Congress be asked, in case it should not approve of the construction of such dam by the Government, to provide that, in case it should authorize such commission or agency to allow others to construct such dam, such commission or agency shall give any irrigation district or districts the preference right to construct such dam for a reasonable period.

(4) That Senator Ankeny be hereby most respectfully and earnestly requested to cause a bill to be drafted and introduced in Congress that will embody the spirit of these resolutions, and secure if possible its enactments.

(5) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President, Vice-President, and to the Speaker of the House.

(6) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of our Representatives in Congress, and that they be hereby most respectfully and earnestly requested to secure if possible a law that will embody the spirit of these resolutions.

(7) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each of the Representatives in Congress from the States of Oregon and Idaho.

(8) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Senator Newlands of Nevada.

(9) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Congressman Burton of Ohio, Chairman of the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and one to Congressman Reeder of Kansas, chairman of the House Committee on Irrigation.

(10) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Secretary of the Interior.

(11) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Governor Mead.

(12) That a copy of these resolutions be sent to Dr. N. G. Blalock, and to Prof. W. D. Lyman, of Walla Walla, Wash., and one be sent to J. N. Teal, and one to the Open River Association, of Portland, Oreg., and one to Capt. W. P. Gray, of Pasco, Wash.

(13) That copies of these resolutions be sent to the various commercial bodies of the towns and cities of the inland empire.

(14) That a committee of three be appointed to confer with the Chamber of Commerce of Franklin County, Wash., and with the Pasco Commercial Club, as to the advisability of those bodies issuing a call for a convention of delegates from the various commercial bodies of the inland empire, and of prominent and representative men of the Northwest conversant with its resources and needs of development, to be held at Pasco at an early date, for the purpose of discussing matters dealt with in these resolutions.

Dated this 30th day of December, 1907, at Two Rivers, Wash.

E. M. WARNER, Chairman.

WM. CHANNELL, Clerk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to add anything to what has been said in the resolutions. It seems to me the reasons given are quite weighty against the passage of the bill.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Washington some questions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is this company to which this franchise is granted incorporated under the general State law or under a special charter?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Under a general State law, as I understand it. We do not have special charters of incorporation; we have a general incorporation law.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Can the gentleman from Washington assure the House that full authority rests in the State of Washington to regulate the charges?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am satisfied that is correct.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. For how long a stretch or reach in the river would the water be utilized under this privilege?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know just how far back the water would be dammed. I can not give the gentleman information in regard to that. I do not know how high the dam would be. As a matter of fact, I do not think the plans and specifications have been all prepared as yet. The people did not want to do that until they knew whether they would get permission. Then those plans and specifications would be submitted to the War Department under the general law for approval, so that I can not say just how far back the water would be dammed by this dam. That would depend upon the height of it, of course.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Are there not arid lands in the near locality?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes. The most important purpose of this bill is to reclaim lands.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Is there any reclamation in progress under the Federal Government in that locality?

Mr. JONES of Washington. There is not, and no immediate prospect of any.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel like opposing this bill, but I question very much whether it ought to pass. I feel, however, like giving notice that in the future I shall object to unanimous consent for bills of this nature.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio and Mr. MANN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KENNEDY], who reported the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JONES] or from the minority leader, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I reported this bill to this House from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I want to say that not the slightest intimation came to that committee of the things that have been laid before the House by the reading of these papers, and I can not understand why it was that the matter was not laid before that committee for its consideration before the bill was reported. I would like to know if either of these gentlemen can give me any information on that point.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the gentleman and to this House that this protest was never submitted to me nor, so far as I know, to any member of our delegation, because none of them has ever presented it to me or said anything upon the subject to me. If these matters had come to my attention they would have been presented to the committee for its consideration before reporting. This bill passed at the last session of Congress through this House. It is a bill framed under the general law under which we pass bill after bill through this House, and it seems to me that the propositions even suggested in this protest are matters that must be regulated necessarily by the State itself, if Congress has not already reserved to itself such power under the general law relating to dams. I doubt if it is for the Federal Government to endeavor to determine what shall be charged for electricity which is developed in this way. The only purpose of the Federal Government, it seems to me, is to protect navigation, and that has been protected in this bill under the general law which the Interstate Commerce Committee has passed. I know the conditions near this place. There are thousands of acres of as good land as lies out of doors which we hope will be reclaimed under this bill. They have been there ever since the Snake River began running to the sea, and there has not been a drop of water placed upon them. This is the first company, apparently, that has ever proposed to place water on those lands. I consider if this bill is passed and this company does what this bill permits it to do, it will have done a great benefit to the people of this locality and of my State and to the people of this nation. There is no question but that our State will see that exorbitant charges are not made for this power and for the distribution of this water. The people of the State may be depended upon, in my judgment, to care for this matter properly, and we reserve the right in this bill to alter, amend, or repeal it at any time, and there is very likely the power under the general law by which Congress can make such regulations as may be necessary.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am so unfortunately placed in my seat that I can not hear much of the discussion that goes on in the House, and I was not able to hear the earlier part of the discussion of this bill. I would like to ask the gentleman if it does not belong to that class of bills by which valuable privileges are given to private corporations by the Federal Government, and particularly to that class of bills the expediency and wisdom of which have been strongly questioned by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, I do not know about that, but I do know that this bill is in line, as I said, with the many bills that have been passed respecting the various streams throughout the country for the development of power.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Exactly so. That is what I understand, and it has been protested that we, in ignorance of the true value of the concessions that have been made to these private corporations, have given away millions upon millions of value, growing in value, because of the rapid decrease in the coal supply of the country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Well, I have not seen any protests from the Department in reference to that. I have seen suggestions made that have been made in this memorial here that has been read, that there is a great deal of power and many possibilities for the future by these permits. But this is simply a permit. We can amend, alter, or repeal the law at any time we see fit, and it seems to me, as I suggested a moment ago, that the matter of the regulation of rates and all that sort of thing is not a matter for the Federal Government with reference to local matters in the State, and that that is entirely a proposition for the State. I must say I would not want the Federal Government to come into my State and try to regulate the price of electricity developed and distributed entirely locally. I would urge the passage of no bill that I believed would injure this section of the State. No one would do more than I to accomplish the great results mentioned in the protests. There is no hope of the measures therein suggested being enacted at any reasonable time in the future. If there was we might hesitate to pass this bill. The reclamation of these lands will bring thousands of people to the State, will furnish homes for many families, will add much to the wealth of the State, and result in incalculable benefit. If it can be done under this bill, it should pass. If nothing is done under the bill, nothing will be lost. If the Government can be induced to take up this matter there is nothing in this bill to prevent it.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for two or three minutes?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill that is before the House is to permit the construction of a dam under what is known as the "general dam act." It was not the opinion of the committee that reported that act, and I judge it was not the opinion of Congress that passed the act, that the Federal Government had nothing to do with the regulation of prices at which power might be sold, because in that act it is expressly provided that Congress may alter, repeal, or amend, without incurring any liability, the act at any time. And when this power is granted, if it be granted by the passage of this bill, it remains within the power of Congress at any time to fix the price at which this company may sell any power that it is able to produce by the use of the dam. In addition to that, any other objections which are offered by these protests are met by the original dam law. If the gentlemen who sent the protests out had ever had the opportunity to read that law the protests, I take it, would never have come here. The law expressly provides——

Mr. WILLIAMS. My attention was called to that; but this question involves the right of petition.

Mr. MANN. I said the "gentlemen who sent the protests here." I know the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi is familiar with the law, and I take it that is the reason he only presented this to the House and did not object to consideration. The law further provides that before the permit is to be granted these people must present to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers their plans and specifications, which must be approved and which can not be deviated from without both the consent of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers. It further provides that these people may be required to maintain and operate at their own expense locks, sluices, and any other needful works for the purposes of navigation. It also provides that they may be required to donate to the United States land which the Government may desire to use in connection with navigation. By this bill we are not giving to these people the right to construct a dam and fix their own charges for all time, nor are we leaving it to the State of Washington to fix the charges. When we presented the bill, which became the general law, we thought, with the immense interests on the rivers, with the immense power that was being developed by dams in the form of electric power, that the Government of the United States granting the right, and that is all it could do—that is, grant the right—should reserve to itself the power to fix the compensation at any time when it chose to exercise it, believing that Congress could be trusted to do the right thing at the right time.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Suppose a State could exercise a control over these rates by virtue of its control over the corporations, and we exercise control by virtue of the fact that we control the power?

Mr. MANN. We exercise control by virtue of the fact that we control the right. When they accept the right with a provision given that we can change and alter the act, they accept it with the right to us to control the power. It is a common thing for us in passing these laws, as in the bridge bill, to grant to the Secretary of War the right to control the right of fixing tolls over bridges where tolls are charged, and that is in the general bridge act.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is a different exercise of the right?

Mr. MANN. Absolutely.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 94.

So the previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 92.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. JONES of Washington, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking and Currency may be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House, and I also ask for such reprints as may be necessary of the bill H. R. 12677.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENDING TIME FOR ORGANIZATION OF MILITIA.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 14.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. R. 14) extending the time allowed the organized militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia to conform to the provisions of section 3 of the act approved January 21, 1903.

Resolved, etc., That the time allowed the organized militia of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia in which to conform their organization, armament, and discipline to that which is now or may hereafter be prescribed for the Regular and Volunteer Armies of the United States by section 3 of the act approved January 21, 1903, be, and is hereby, extended to January 21, 1910.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, and in explanation of the measure will say:

Under the act of January 21, 1903, popularly known as the Dick law, to reorganize the militia of the different States and Territories, it was provided that the militia of the different States and Territories and the District of Columbia should conform in organization, armament, and discipline to that prescribed for the Regular Army and volunteer forces of the United States within five years from that date in order to participate in the appropriations made by Congress for the militia. Last Congress increased the appropriation from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000, which is apportioned according to representation in Congress among the different States and Territories, based on their population. Now, the five years in which to conform expires on the 21st of this month, and only four States have conformed, according to the report of the Secretary of War. Unless this time is extended and this resolution is passed, the other States and Territories which have not conformed will be deprived of their quota of this $2,000,000 appropriation—the militia will lose that much. So you will readily see that there is urgency for this measure. The State of New York, for instance, has not complied, and would lose $155,000.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The States have had five years in which to comply with the law. What is the reason offered for not complying with it?

Mr. STEENERSON. It is not absolutely correct to say that they have had five years.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said that the law passed five years ago and that it will expire within a few days and that only four States had conformed.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will explain. It is necessary for the Secretary of War to promulgate rules and regulations, and those rules and regulations were first promulgated only about two years ago, and, as promulgated at that time, it was claimed by many experts in these matters that it was impossible to comply with those regulations prescribing the organization. Only on the 2d day of November last were the latest rules and regulations prescribed for the organization of the militia promulgated by the Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. What the gentleman proposes, then, is simply to extend the law for two years later?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; it was impossible to comply as to the District of Columbia. They could not comply because it required an act of Congress to reorganize the militia, so that it was impossible for them to comply, because Congress had failed to act. Several States required legislation, and their legislatures only meet every two years. They have not yet had time to act, at least not since the last rules prescribed by the War Department were published.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I also ask a reprint of certain documents in respect to this militia matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for a reprint of the following documents, which the clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Report No. 1094, Fifty-seventh Congress; public act 33, Fifty-seventh Congress, and House Document No. 607, Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that ought to go to the Committee on Printing. These are documents of former Congresses.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the reference will be made to the Committee on Printing. The gentleman will put his resolution in shape and it will go through the box.

REVISION OF CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701, the penal codification bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal codification bill, with Mr. BANNON in the chair.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in presenting to the House for its consideration the present bill from the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws, I am conscious of the fact that the subject is devoid of popular interest, and that the attention of the House can be held to it only from a sense of patriotic duty. This bill has in it nothing that can appeal to party policies or to partisan interests. It is devoid of the interest of appropriation bills which appeal to our patriotic pride and to our national importance; but, Mr. Chairman, devoid as it is of enthusiasm and lacking, as it does, all the essential elements and requisites of parliamentary inspiration, it does, in my judgment, appeal to the very highest sense of the patriotism of this deliberative body.

The object of this bill is to perfect the organic law of the land; to present the permanent laws of the United States in the most authentic and authoritative form, to the end that these permanent laws, these great fundamental legislative declarations, shall stand before the country in such clear, systematic, and conspicuous form that they may be known to all men; that these important statutes that are intended to safeguard and protect the life, liberty, and property of our citizens shall be extricated from the great confusion into which they have been allowed to fall by many years of inattention, and shall be written clearly and legibly on our statute books as forcible and conspicuous evidences of our national justice, national honor, and national advancement.

It requires, Mr. Chairman, but little thought upon this dry subject to arouse the student to enthusiasm. The history of the world establishes the fact that the richest legacy that the nations of the past have left to succeeding ages has been their principles of organic law. Do you ask me of the religion, of the morality, of the intelligence, of the chastity, or the purity of a nation of antiquity? I will point you for answer to the permanent laws of that nation as they exist upon its statute books of stone or papyrus and by that standard chiefly, if not alone, will the status of that nation, in all that goes to constitute individual or national honor be established.

From the historic standpoint, therefore, this technical, uninteresting subject of the revision of laws assumes a stupendous importance and takes upon itself an interesting aspect, and is entitled to appeal to us as an inspiration to relieve us from the tedium of the uninteresting details of its consummation.

Authentic history affords emphatic and convincing illustrations of the truth of this great principle—that the most valuable tribute of the nations of the past to our present twentieth century civilization comes to us in the form of permanent organic principles of law that have survived the destruction of time and the obliteration of states and of monuments. [Applause.] Apart from the scheme of divine salvation, which is our distinctive and peculiar inheritance from the early Hebrew nations, the great gift to the world of that grand historic people is the Mosaic code of laws. From that code this nation and all other civilized nations to-day derive the great basic principles of the moral law; the law regulating marriage; consanguinity, and the sacredness of human life. No nation to-day places upon its statute book the inhibition "Thou shalt not kill," that was written indelibly upon tables of stone by the hand of God amid the thunders and tempests of Mount Sinai. [Applause.] We regulate the punishment of the crime, but derive its existence from that historic ancient source.

The old Roman nation has passed away. Its palaces and its monuments are crumbled to dust, and even "its tombs are tenantless of their heroic dead," but the Roman nation lives to-day in every nation of the civilized world. The corner stone of our present legal structure is drawn from the fundamental organic principles derived from the civil law. Our knowledge of partnership, our law concerning corporations, our law concerning wills, the creation of admiralty courts, the creation of courts of chancery, nay, the very development of the law merchant itself, are derived from that historic source. These benefactions to humanity will survive when the conquests of her Cæsar, the eloquence of her Cicero, and the strains of her divine Horace shall have been forgotten.

Mr. Chairman, the same thing is true of the dark ages, that great period when the learning and religion of the world seemed to have been extinguished. Out of that void, out of the darkness that hovered over the mediæval world, has come to us as one of our fundamental priciples of national sovereignty, come to us directly from the feudal law, that great principle of eminent domain, which enables the public to take private property for public use, which declares the ultimate sovereignty of all property to be in the government itself.

And, Mr. Chairman, if the time should ever come when Macauley's fabled South Sea Islanders should sit upon the broken arches of London Bridge and mourn over the ruins of St. Paul, amid the wreck of these ruins triumphing over that universal desolation, burning as a beacon an inspiration and a guide for all great civilization to follow would rise the great fabric of the common law of England [applause], those indestructible principles of right, those great axioms of remedial justice between man and man, that effectual and eternal safeguard of human liberty, the right of trial by jury, that splendid contribution of that common law, to the regeneration and uplifting of mankind, that great legal evolution of the germ of human liberty of which the American Constitution is the highest culmination. [Applause.]

So, Mr. Chairman, while the written history of a nation may be sometimes apocryphal, its traditions involved in obscurity, the story of its heroes mere fiction—its written permanent, fundamental, and organic law is imperishable and definite and a tangible and absolutely reliable record of its intelligence, of its religion, of its ethics, and of its civilization. And as some physiologist from the vertebræ of an extinct mammoth can reconstruct the complete animal and tell its habits and its habitat; can reveal the geological period of the world in which it lived, so from the fragment of the laws of an extinct nation historians can reconstruct the civilization, character, habits, and customs of that nation and rewrite with striking accuracy its forgotten history. [Applause.]

The scholarly world has recently been amazed and the historic character of a great period practically rewritten by the discoveries in 1901 of the permanent laws of Hammurabi, antedating the Christian Era by nearly two thousand three hundred years. In the light of these enactments and from the spirit and language of the statutes carved upon that famous stone has the history of Babylonish civilization been reincarnated. [Applause.]

In this light, therefore, Mr. Speaker, the philosophic statesman may regard the task before us as one of a high order. This elevated view may rescue it from the tiresome plodding of patient drudgery and place it upon the high and patriotic plane of a broad, sacred, and inspiring duty.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with these few words of introduction, I propose to call your attention particularly to the bill itself as briefly as possible. I shall not weary this House with minute detail respecting the history of this legislation. You have heard time after time of the appointment in 1897 of a Commission for the revision of the laws. You all understand that originally submitted to that commission was the power to revise and codify the criminal laws of the United States. You know that in 1899 a bill having been introduced in the Senate looking to the perfection of the judicial title, on motion of Senator Hoar was referred to this commission with enlarged powers respecting that department of the law. And how, in 1901, when the public generally had become aroused to the confused and unintelligible condition of the general statutes of the country, the duties of that commission were further enlarged by Congress, and it was required to codify and revise all of the permanent laws of the United States.

Reports were made by this commission from time to time to Congress, and in 1901 the Revision Commission presented its report of the penal code. It was submitted by the Speaker to the then Committee on the Revision of the Laws and a report was made by the committee, but no consideration was obtained in the House. Finally, in June, 1906, this commission, which had been in existence for upward of ten years, was required to make its final report on or before December 15, 1906. On December 15 that final report of the commission was made, and it is before me. A copy of it was given to Members of Congress, and you have it as a public document. You will remember that it is in two volumes, comprising about nineteen hundred pages and containing something over nine thousand sections of law.

This report was submitted by the Speaker to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Permit me to say, going back a moment, that before the time of the final report of the commission, the partial report upon the penal code had been submitted by the Speaker to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the Fifty-ninth Congress took up that report and reported a bill upon it, but that bill did not obtain consideration of Congress. Recognizing that this was a matter of great importance and likely to occupy a great deal of the time of both the House and the Senate, and also recognizing that if we were to pass the bill through the House and then send it to the Senate and have it by that body referred to its Committee upon the Revision of the Laws and reported back to the Senate, different views might prevail among the different membership of the two committees and that the legislation would probably never be accomplished; recognizing this fact, I say, a resolution was introduced by me asking for the appointment of a joint committee consisting of five members of the Senate and five members of the House for the consideration of this bill. A committee of that kind was appointed in the Fifty-ninth Congress, and the bill relating to the Criminal Code was carefully considered and was reported back to this House, but no action was taken upon it. At the close of the Fifty-ninth Congress by another resolution introduced by me, a joint committee of five Senators and five Members from the Sixtieth Congress was appointed and that committee sat during the recess of Congress and resumed consideration of the bill embodying the Criminal Code; and it is the unanimous report of that joint committee that is before the House at this time, recommending the bill before us for consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, this brief review will show without further discussion on my part the recognized necessity by the country at large for legislation upon this subject, and in order to demonstrate the fact that that insistent demand from the public at large and from Congress was not without serious basis of reason allow me now to call attention briefly to the present condition of the statute laws of the United States. You are all familiar with the fact that the Federal statutes today, as we understand them, as you have access to them, are found embodied in what is known as the Revised Statutes, second edition, 1878, first supplement, second supplement, and three separate volumes of the Statutes at Large, numbers 32, 33 and 34.

In explaining the contents of the volume known as the second edition of the Revised Statutes of 1878 I would state the fact that that revision was the first revision ever made of the Federal laws, and that none has been attempted since that time until the presentation of this bill.

It is an accurate statement and one entitled to great consideration to say that there have been more laws of a general and permanent character passed by the Federal Congress since 1873 than had been passed from the formation of the Government down to that time. The committee of 1873 was preceded by a revision commission just as this committee was, but when the work of the revision came before that committee, and they felt the necessity of attempting to get the whole work through in one Congress, they adopted the principle of making no change whatever in existing law. They submitted the bill to the House upon the authoritative statement by the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee, that it was simply a revision and codification, that it simply consisted in posting the existing laws of the United States and putting under each title the laws with reference to that title, and that it contained no new legislation whatever. In that way, night sessions being held for that purpose, after a little discussion, accepting the representations of the committee, Congress permitted that revision to go through with practically very little consideration. I mean that a reference to the proceedings of that Congress will show that a great deal of the bill was not read, that many sections were passed by titles. The method of proceeding was in some instances at least that the title would be announced and inquiry would be made of the chairman of the committee if there was any new law in this title and upon the statement of the chairman of the committee that there was none, or if there were a few changes explaining those changes, that whole title would be passed as a title. The result of that was—and that is what I want to speak of in explaining this second edition of 1878—that this hasty legislation revealed, when it was finished, a great number of errors. The succeeding session of Congress by one bill corrected over 200 of those errors, and then appointed Mr. George C. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, a special commissioner to revise the revision and also to carry into it the legislation of the Forty-third and the Forty-fourth Congresses. Therefore your revised statutes of 1878 is a revision of a revision, a revision of the Revised Statutes of 1873. I doubt if anywhere outside of a public library can be found to-day the old revision of 1873, and what I particularly desire to call attention to is that this volume with which we are all so familiar and which we regard as the storehouse and treasury of our permanent Federal laws—this volume of The Revised Statutes, second edition, 1878, contains three distinct kinds of law, of different authenticity and evidential value. You will find this upon examination—and I presume those of you who are lawyers have frequent occasion to examine it—the main text of the book is the revision of 1873. You will find that the errors, corrected by the act of Congress of the Forty-third Congress, are included in brackets in italics. You will find that the new legislation of the Forty-third and the Forty-fourth Congresses is carried in and included in brackets in roman type. Now, if I have succeeded in making myself clear to you, the book itself contains three distinct kinds of law. The original publication, the main body of the book, is an original enactment. It is the revision of 1873. It was passed by Congress, signed by the President, and is a law that proves itself. No reference can be had to anything behind it to explain it. That portion which is included in brackets in italics and that portion that is included in brackets in roman is by the act of March 9, 1878, providing for its publication to be taken to be prima facie evidence only of the laws therein contained, but by the provisions of that law the inclusion of the laws in this volume shall not preclude reference to or control in case of any discrepancy the effect of any original act of Congress passed since the 1st day of December, 1873

Therefore, as a first step in the demonstration of the confusion and of the uncertainty in which the condition of the laws of the United States are, I repeat that the volume known as the Revised Statutes of 1878 contain three distinct kinds of law of different evidential value.

The other books containing our so-called revised statutes are, first: The first supplement of the Revised Statutes—this is not a revision at all. By its very preface it disclaims to be anything of the kind. It embraces the legislation of a general and permanent nature, enacted at each session of Congress subsequent to the first day of the Congress of 1873 (and thereby duplicates the legislation of 1873 and 1874) down to and including the legislation of the Fifty-first Congress in 1891. As indicated in the preface of this volume it is neither a revision nor a consolidation. It is a reproduction of the laws enacted since the passage of the Revised Statutes, which are neither obsolete, local, temporary, or expired, special, substituted, or repealed. That is what our supplement No. 1 is.

Second. Our supplement No. 2 does not have even that much of editing. That is simply a binding together of the various volumes published at the end of each Congress under the provisions of the act of Congress of June 4, 1897. It embraces nine separate parts of these pamphlet editions, which are published at the close of each Congress. These supplements are simply bound together and made into a volume, with a consolidated index of the whole, and the provisions of the statute providing for the publication of these unedited editions comprising this second supplement is as follows:

The publications herein authorized shall be taken to be prima facie evidence of the laws therein contained, but shall not change or alter any existing law nor preclude reference to nor control, in case of any discrepancy, the effect of any original act passed by Congress.

That brings our legislation down only to 1901. In addition to the volumes already referred to, we have volumes 32, 33, and 34 of the Statutes at Large, containing the laws of the Fifty-seventh, Fifty-eighth, and Fifty-ninth Congresses, unedited, and confused with all the provisional and temporary enactments of these three Congresses.

Therefore, gentlemen, this brief and hasty review of the present condition of the statute laws of the United States will, I think, justify the statement of the committee that probably the permanent laws of no other civilized country can be found in such confused condition, and that to anybody but the student, or the lawyer, or the judges, a man expert in finding the law, it is almost impossible, without a careful and extended research, to tell what the law of the United States is upon any particular subject because to find the authentic law it is necessary to examine the Revised Statutes of 1878 and 17 volumes of the Statutes at Large, each containing an average of 500 pages, or, in other words the original enactments of every Congress since 1873. This confusion arises in great part from the unphilosophical and unsystematic methods of our legislation and from the constant custom of Congress in embracing in appropriation bills important provisions of permanent laws. A few of many interesting illustrations of this confusion and this irregular legislation may be found in this statement. That important amendment to the Federal law entitling a party in interest to testify in his own behalf, a law that revolutionized the administration of justice, is found as an almost indistinguishable section of an appropriation bill; the law by which we exercise our supervision over the Republic of Cuba is embodied in a fortification bill; the law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in the Capitol is found as a remote and disconnected part of an immigration bill. All these important acts are so closely intermingled with the general provisions of these bills that neither the title nor the context give any indication of their existence. The present revision when completed will be an original enactment, will repeal all existing statutes, will present the entire Federal legal system in a scientific order in two volumes of ordinary legal dimensions, and the laws therein contained will prove themselves without reference to any other acts of Congress. The mere statement of these facts, Mr. Chairman, without further argument or comment, explains fully the necessity for this revision and is ample justification for the action of our committee in pressing the work upon Congress at this time.

It may be a matter of interest to the House, and they have a right to inquire of this committee why we have presented for your consideration the penal code first. Why have we taken it out of its regular order in the report of the commission, in which I believe it is the last chapter, and presented it to the consideration of the House in our first bill? In answer to that, Mr. Chairman, I would say that we recognize the absolute impossibility of attempting to secure legislation upon the whole report of the Commission, upon the nine thousand sections of law, in one bill, or even at one session of Congress. In the second place, we felt that the criminal title was a separate, independent, and distinct thing of itself, capable of almost entire separation from the main body of the law, and that it was of the utmost importance that these laws that protect our life, liberty, and our property, to which all the citizens of this Union are subjected, should exist cleary upon our statute books, so that all who are bound by their provisions might have easy reference thereto. And third, and perhaps the controlling consideration, was that Congress itself had indicated the order of the importance of this work. It had by the act of 1897 first committed to the Commission the penal code. The work, therefore, was first referred to your committee, and we had acted upon it before the final report of the Commission was made, and on this account and for the reasons before stated we felt it was the logical and proper order to present to Congress our report upon the criminal section first.

Having established the order of legislation, we come logically to the consideration of the criminal laws of the United States as a system, and I want to say to you that one of the most interesting chapters of the history of the United States is the history of her criminal law. A careful study of it, which I have not time, of course, to allude to to-day, will show one interesting phase of the progress and development of this country and of the expansion and development of that novel principle in the history of the nation of the distinction between State and national sovereignty.

The first Crimes Act was passed at the second session of the First Congress and became a law on April 30, 1790. It was signed by George Washington and contained 33 sections. That Crimes Act was molded largely upon the Crimes Act of Great Britain. It provided for offenses against neutrality, for offenses upon the high seas, for offenses against the coinage and the general instrumentalities of the Government. It was passed and left in that brief form under the full belief of Congress, of the leading lawyers of the country, and of the Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, that the United States Government possessed a common law jurisdiction. It was passed with the full belief that Congress, having committed to the circuit court of the United States the punishment of all offenses against the Government, that wherever an offense was not denounced by Congress, but was an evil against good society and good government, that independent of any statute, an indictment might be drawn and a man might be tried, convicted, and sentenced for an infraction of the rules of good government under the common law to exactly the same extent as such a crime could be punished by the several States.

This belief prevailed very generally down to about 1812. In 1806, you remember, the Connecticut Courant had published a story that President Jefferson and the Congress of the United States had taken a bribe of $2,000,000 from Bonaparte to permit a treaty with Spain. They were indicted for criminal libel in the Federal courts of the United States; and then, for the first time, the Supreme Court authoritatively announced, by Justice Johnson, after careful consideration and exhaustive argument of the subject upon first principles, that the United States had no common-law jurisdiction; that no act was an offense against the United States until it had been so denounced by Congress. and a punishment fixed for the offense, and until a court had been assigned to try it. The overthrow of the common-law theory was never entirely acquiesced in by Judge Story, and by letters and other communications he announced his firm conviction that the United States, by virtue of its composition and by the provisions of the judicial act of 1789, did have this common-law jurisdiction; and he tried to have an act passed by Congress to the effect that whenever any offense not denounced by the Federal law was an offense at common law that it should be punishable by indictment and fine and imprisonment.

The United States, by virtue of the decision in the Courant case, was left almost entirely without criminal laws for its protection except upon the high seas, and for the offense of treason and offenses against the coinage; and it is a matter of interest to me, and I think will be a matter of more than passing interest to Members of Congress, if I read to you extracts from letters of Judge Story upon this subject, written at the time he was urging the necessity for the enactment of a more complete criminal code.

STORY LETTERS.

On the 27th of May, 1813, he wrote his friend Nathaniel Williams, then a Member of Congress, as follows:

I sent Mr. Pinckney a few days since some sketches of improvements in the criminal code of the United States. It is grossly and barbarously defective. The courts are crippled; offenders, conspirators, and traitors are enabled to carry on their purposes almost without check. It is truly melancholy that Congress will exhaust themselves so much in mere political discussions and remain so unjustifiably negligent of the great concerns of the public. They seem to have forgotten that such a thing as an internal police organization is necessary to protect the Government and execute the laws. I believe in my conscience many Members imagine that the laws will execute themselves.

On the 3d of August following he again wrote Mr. Williams:

I am wearied with perpetual complainings to you and to the Government as to the deficiencies of our criminal code. A disgraceful affair has happened in Boston of the rescue of a prize by the owners. I should not be at all surprised that the actors should escape without animadversion, owing to defects in our criminal laws. Nor should I be astonished that in all cases of American vessels seized, trading with the enemy, forcible rescues should be attempted hereafter even against our national ships. What Congress mean by their gross and mischievous indifference to the state of the criminal code, I know not. In my opinion, the Government will be completely prostrated unless they give jurisdiction to their courts and a common-law authority to punish crimes against the United States. One would suppose that Congress believed the millennium was at hand, and that laws would execute themselves. I wish, with all my soul, that they would attend a little less to mere popular topics calculated to secure their elections and a little more to the real permanent interests and security of the Government. What think you of a Government where public crimes on the high seas are, with very few exceptions, left wholly unpunished, and crimes on the land are suffered to remain without the least criminal action?

A few years after writing these letters Justice Story drafted a bill entitled "A bill further to extend the judicial system of the United States," in which he provided that the Federal courts should have jurisdiction to punish crimes against the Government. Commenting on this provision of the bill, in a letter to Mr. Pinckney, he says:

The criminal code of the United States is singularly defective and inefficient. Few, very few, of the practical crimes (if I may so say) are now punishable by statutes, and if the courts have no general common-law jurisdiction (which is a vexed question) they are wholly dispunishable. The State courts have no jurisdiction of crimes committed on the high seas or in places ceded to the United States. Rapes, arsons, batteries, and a host of other crimes may in these places be now committed with impunity. Surely in naval yards, arsenals, forts, and dry docks, and on the high seas, a common-law jurisdiction is indispensable. Suppose a conspiracy to commit treason in any of these places, by civil persons, how can the crime be punished? These are cases where the United States have an exclusive local jurisdiction. And can it be less fit that the Government should have power to protect itself in all other places where it exercises a legitimate authority? That Congress have power to provide for all crimes against the United States is incontestable.

The letter continues:

The printed bill was originally prepared by myself and submitted to my brethren of the Supreme Court. It received a revision from several of them, particularly Judges Marshall and Washington, and was wholly approved by them, and, indeed, except as to a single section, by all the other judges. Judge Johnson expressed some doubt as to the eleventh section; but, as I understood him, rather as to its expediency than the competency of Congress to enact it. I think that I am at liberty to say that it will be satisfactory to the court if it is passed. It will, indeed, give us more business, and we have now as much as we wish. But it will subserve great public interests, and we ought not to decline anything which the Constitution contemplates and the public policy requires.

May I add that if I shall be so fortunate as to meet your opinions on this subject, and the public so fortunate as to interest your zeal and talents in the passage of the bill, it will establish an epoch in our judicial history which will be proudly appealed to by all who in truth and sincerity love the Constitution of the United States. It will be a monument of fame to the statesman who shall achieve it, which, being independent of the political opinions of the day, will brighten as it rises amid the dust and the ruins of the future ages.

The bill seems never to have passed Congress, but in 1818 a special bill was prepared by Justice Story relating to the punishment of crimes, which was made the basis for the crimes act of 1825, and in reference to which he wrote Mr. Webster on the 4th of January, 1824, as follows:

You are aware that the criminal code of the United States is shockingly defective. I see that the subject is before you. I have a copy of Mr. Daggett's bill in 1818, which was pretty accurate (as I have some reminiscences), and if you can not find a copy of it I will send you mine. I should prefer a code in the form of articles, and will assist in drawing it if it is necessary.

Thus time after time during 1813 and 1814 and down to 1816 in a series of letters of this character written by Judge Story he pointed out the absolute inefficiency of the criminal laws, the helpless condition of the courts, and the fact that Congress took no steps whatever to remedy them.

Finally, in 1825, the Crimes Act, drawn by Judge Story and introduced by Daniel Webster, was passed by the House and Senate. The bill as originally prepared by Judge Story contained seventy sections of new law. It passed the Senate in that form. It came to the House, and the House cut it down to twenty-six sections, and in that way it passed; and as twenty-six additional sections it went into the statute book as the Crimes Act of 1825. Now, that act of 1825 provided for very few new offenses, being chiefly an enlargement of existing laws respecting offenses upon the high seas and other subjects upon which Congress had already legislated. It seemed to be the policy of the Government at that time to avoid the assumption of its criminal responsibility, although its jurisdiction to punish offenses was exclusive in a territory of constantly increasing area, including forts, arsenals, magazines, docks, navy-yards, military reservations, etc.

Realizing the utter inadequacy of existing criminal provisions and rejecting Judge Story's recommendation for the enactment of a common law section, Congress resorted to the device of the following provision, which appears as section 3 of the Act of March 3, 1825, to wit:

If any offense is committed in any place ceded to or under the jurisdiction of the United States, the punishment of which is not provided by any law of the United States, it shall receive the punishment prescribed by the laws of the State in which the place is situated for like offenses.

There seems to have been an idea at that time that the effect of that law was to put in force the laws of the State, that it was to enable the Federal courts to enforce the State law. That theory was very soon overthrown, when the Supreme Court of the United States said, "No, the effect of that law is simply this, that by this omnibus section, by a stroke of the pen, you have written into the Federal statutes all the laws of all the States of the Union upon subjects upon which you have not legislated, and you have adopted, therefore, laws which you can not originate, which you can not amend, which you can not control, but which you make the laws of the United States."

The imperfection of that device was very soon discovered. It was not long before a case was called to the attention of the Supreme Court in which an attempt was made to enforce a law of a State passed after the 3d of March, 1825. The State in that particular instance had repealed the law in existence at that time, and had passed another law. The Supreme Court said "No, that section means that you can enforce just the laws that were in existence in the State on the 3d day of March, 1825. It is monstrous to suppose that you can permit a State to enact laws for the Federal Government. They are different sovereignties, and if the State since that time has repealed the law and passed a new law, you are without the protection of that new law."

Then another interesting question arose: Was it within the power of the Federal courts to enforce a State law after the law had been repealed? That is perhaps an open question to-day, but shortly after that the act of March 3, 1825, was amended in such a way as to include any law of the State that was in existence in March, 1825, whether the State had repealed the law or not. A few years later another very serious defect was found in this provision. The Supreme Court of the United States said, "It applies only to territory that was in the possession of the United States on March 3, 1825. The cession of territory to the United States under the provisions of the Constitution can not bring into existence laws that may have been dead forty years;" and in a very learned opinion the courts limited the operation of that section entirely to territory possessed by the United States in 1825. Again the patchwork legislation began, and a new section, known as section 5391, was enacted, which included both territory ceded at the time of the passage of the act and territory subsequently acquired, and also included a provision that the Federal Government should have the right to enforce the law, even though the State had repealed it.

I will not stop to speak of the undesirable conditions of that legislation, where the United States is obliged to enforce a law that a State has discarded and abandoned, but I will pass to another defect that was found to exist in that law. Subsequently it was held that even under section 5391, this law did not apply to any territory that had been obtained since 1825 except by cession, and it was discovered that a great deal of property, for military reservations, for arsenals, post-offices, custom-houses, quarantine stations, and court-houses had been acquired by reservation; that the United States, owning the land, existing in territorial form, would reserve a portion of it for Federal purposes, and then admit the State to the Union. The Supreme Court said, "Your act does not cover that class of cases. It is specific. It relates to territory subsequently acquired by cession. It relates to the laws of the United States that were in force at the time you passed it, to lands ceded to the United States by the legislature of a State in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution, but it does not relate to territory that has been subsequently acquired in any other way." Therefore in 1898, as a provision in a fortification bill, an attempt was made to remedy that defect. But in remedying that defect, doubtless by an omission of the man who drew the law, one of the vital provisions of section 5391 was omitted. The words "or subsequently acquired" were left out. Consequently it stands as a legal fact to-day that on all territory acquired by the United States of America since 1898 for the erection of forts, arsenals, magazines, docks, and other needed buildings—which term "other needed buildings" has been held to include court-houses, custom-houses, post-offices, and the numberless instrumentalities of the Government—we have no power of enforcing that provision incorporating the laws of the State into our own laws, and that there are great common-law crimes—for instance the crime of robbery, the crime of assault with a deadly weapon—that can not be punished at all upon property of that kind. They can not be punished of course except in the Federal courts, because the jurisdiction of the Federal courts is exclusive. They can not be punished in the Federal courts because we have no law denouncing these offenses as crimes except when committed on the high seas.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it was this defect in our law that led the Commission to believe that it was the intention of Congress, in committing to them the revision of the Penal Code, that they should abandon the old system of penology in force in the United States.

They said, in effect, no State has the same system now that it had thirty years ago at the time of our last revision, and Congress intended by the creation of a commission to construct an entirely new criminal code. Indeed, they did not think enough of the Federal statutes respecting crimes even to make them the basis of their work. They did not even codify them; they ignored them entirely. They constructed an entirely new code and presented to Congress in their original report a penal system in advance of or equal at least to the most advanced penal system in the world. They took the models of all the best States and went even to the Anglo-Indian code and embodied many provisions existing there, and you will find in the original report of the Commission—not the report you have, because they modified it, but the original report of the Commission you will find embraces in the criminal title alone 174 new sections—and bear in mind that when they began the work the number of sections belonging distinctly to the criminal title were 229, and this Commission recommended in the criminal title alone a bill embracing 400 sections.

Our committee carefully considered the claims upon which the Commission based its right to act. They claimed that the language of the resolution creating it itself was broad enough to authorize its action. Without disputing that, our committee realized that that kind of legislation would never be recognized by this Congress. We recognize that if we attempt under the guise of the revision or codification to amend materially the substance of the laws of the country to present new subjects of criminal legislation; if we attempted to absorb within our committee the functions of all the other committees of the House, to say the least, it would establish a dangerous precedent and would meet with sturdy opposition. If we could do it in one respect we could do it in another; when we come to the revision of other titles we might bring in a bill for a merchant marine or we might revise the tariff or we might overthrow the meat-inspection law. We decided that Congress never intended to commit that power to the Commission and would not recognize it in the committee and that we could not act upon that theory. Therefore, our committee began at the bottom, began to build on exising law, and began to prepare a complete codification of these laws as a basis, and then we proceeded along the lines outlined by what we conceived to be the purpose of the act of Congress creating the Commission of Revision.

That is, we have brought together all statutes or parts of statutes relating to the same subject. We have omitted redundant and obsolete enactments. We have made such alterations as seemed necessary to reconcile contradictions, supply omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text, and we have proposed and embodied in the revision such changes in the substance of existing law as in our judgment we thought necessary and advisable.

In the performance of this work we have presented our bill in such a manner as to call the attention of Congress, without any independent research, to just exactly what the committee proposes, and I call the attention of Members specifically to the bill and to the report, both of which are before you. Accompanying the report, as a supplement thereto, is a duplicate copy of the bill with a revision and codification of the existing statutes on the opposite side. That is, perhaps, the only codification of the existing laws of the United States. That was done by the committee. You will find every provision of new law recommended appearing both in the bill and in this supplemental report in italics. And you will find that whenever different sections of law have been consolidated and therefore rewritten, that is where there has been legislation at various times on the same subject, and we have comprised in one section what has heretofore been in three or four sections, or where we have omitted anything in the consolidation—omitted provisions of existing law—that in each of these cases we have called attention to the change by placing the proposed section in brackets.

Therefore, by a mere visual inspection of the report before you, you will have your attention first attracted to the fact as to whether there is any change proposed in the section; secondly, if there is any change, and if the change consists in proposed new law, you have it in italics; third, if it is a consolidation of sections, if it is an elision or omission of anything, you have it in brackets, and on the opposite page of the report is the law as it stands to-day; so that a minute's inspection will show you just the nature and character of the changes proposed and the recommendations we have submitted to you, and this brief examination will enable you to consider our recommendations intelligently.

So much for the general nature of the bill and the report.

The principal changes proposed by your committee in the existing provisions of the criminal code are comprised in certain general provisions relating to the whole title, to which I desire briefly to call attention. These are five in number. For instance, in the line of uniformity we have begun every statute with the word "whoever." That change we have not referred to in the report except by reference to it on the first page of the bill. The existing law is entirely irregular and without uniformity. Sometimes the beginning of a section is "any person who," sometimes it is "every person who," and sometimes it is "whoever." Now, we have adopted the uniform system of opening every section with the word "whoever," which I think will require no argument to support.

In the second place, we have made one fundamental distinction to which I desire to call attention, and I desire to call the careful attention of every Member, and particularly every lawyer, in this House to it. It is a general provision that pervades this law and has reference to every section in it, and is therefore not indicated by either italics or brackets, and that is this: We have omitted the designation of offenses in the sections as either felonies or misdemeanors, in other words have abolished the existing arbitrary distinction between felonies and misdemeanors.

You will find nowhere in the section itself any designation of the offense other than its description and its punishment, and you will find that we have made a general provision which provides that every offense that is punishable by death or by an imprisonment to exceed one year shall be deemed a felony and that all other offenses shall be deemed misdemeanors. Now, I do not propose at this time to argue that very extensively. The question may arise upon objection to some of the sections early in the consideration of the bill, and if it becomes necessary I will then present a full legal argument upon the subject. I only want to state the fact that felony has lost its significance absolutely in our laws; indeed, it never had any significance under the American Constitution, never stood for anything except a designation of an infamous offense. In its origin, and in its common-law application it meant, of course, either punishment by death or such punishment as was accompanied with forfeiture of a man's goods. The very word itself, "felony," derived from the feudal law, means a loss of the fee. All the common law respecting forfeiture, of course, was abolished by our Constitution, and it has existed only because we incorporated it by following the laws of England and because it was customary by our legal draftsmen to designate offenses as high misdemeanors in preparing statutes or as misdemeanors, or as felonies simply because they had always been so designated. It has no significance at all to-day except this, that under our law of criminal procedure the man who is indicted for a felony is entitled to a certain number of challenges, and the man who is indicted for a misdemeanor is entitled to a certain less number of challenges. I want to say that the custom in our law as it is to-day is not all uniform. Possibly one-half of the new statutes that have been passed in the last twenty-five years do not designate the offense either as a felony or as a misdemeanor. Some of them do. It seems to depend entirely upon the mood of the man who draws the statute or the model that he has adopted, or the form which has been prescribed.

Therefore, to-day, whenever a judge is to try an offense of the kind which is not designated in the statute either as a felony or a misdemeanor, he is obliged to have a preliminary trial of the case to decide how many challenges the man indicted is entitled to. In case after case the judge has been obliged to suspend the operation of the business and write a learned opinion by going back to find out whether the offense denounced in that act was a felony at the common law or a misdemeanor, and judges have deprecated time after time the carelessness of Congress in that kind of legislation. I may say that thirty-six States and the Territories—indeed, every State in the Union, I think, that has a modern code of penal laws—has abolished the distinction and adopted the classification that we have adopted. By the adoption of this general classification we believe we have emancipated our statutes from many glaring inconsistencies, relieved the trial judge of much embarrassment, and brought our system in line with advanced penal legislation of other countries.

In the third place, we have stricken out of the punishment of offenses hard labor as a distinctive part of the sentence. You will find in no section of this law a provision for hard labor. You will find in some existing sections of law that provision. In that respect our recent legislation has not been uniform. Many of the criminal laws that we have recently passed do not impose hard labor; occasionally some of them do. Now, the reason for its abolition is this, and it seems to me that the mere statement of it is controlling. The courts have held that wherever a prisoner is sentenced to a prison where hard labor is a part of the prison discipline he is subjected to it as a part of the discipline and not as a part of the sentence. All the Federal prisons have hard labor as a part of the discipline. All of you know that the United States has not enough prisons for its prisoners, and under a provision of the law we are employing a great many State prisons, with the permission of the authorities of the State, for the incarceration of Federal prisoners. Some of those prisons have hard labor as a part of their discipline and some do not, and great difficulties are experienced by the judges in fixing sentences. It has been authoritatively decided by the Supreme Court that when hard labor is by law a distinctive part of the sentence the prisoner is entitled to it, and if the court does not give it to him he can be discharged on a writ of habeas corpus. Now, the judges have said, "Why not give us more flexibility? Whenever hard labor needs to be imposed we will send a man to a prison where hard labor is a part of the prison discipline, and we shall not be embarrassed with the provisions of hard labor in a sentence which must be imposed and which must be suffered, when we are so situated respecting prisons as to have nowhere to send him to receive it." I can cite you to a case where a man had been sentenced to hard labor, had been sent to a State prison that did not impose it, and where he came before the court on a writ of habeas corpus and asked to be discharged because his sentence was not enforced according to law.

Now, therefore, for this reason, which seems to me to be conclusive without further argument, we have stricken out hard labor and left it to the discretion of the judge wholly in adapting it to the prison to which he sends him. Originally, hard labor had some significance. It used to be regarded a substantive part of an infamous crime. The earlier cases and the English cases made the degradation of hard labor an essential ingredient of the infamous crime, which we have incorporated in our Constitution from the English law; but for twenty years our courts have uniformly decided that a sentence in a State prison, in a penitentiary, is an infamy, and that an offense under the Constitution is an infamous offense if it is a sentence for more than a year, without any regard to the provision of hard labor.

In the fourth place, the committee has adopted a uniform method of fixing in all offenses not punishable by death the maximum punishment only, leaving the minimum to the discretion of the trial judge.

The criminal law necessarily subjects to its corrective discipline all who violate its provisions. The weak and the vicious, the first offender and the atrocious criminal, the mere technical transgressor and the expert in crime, are alike guilty of the same nominal offense. In the one case the utmost severity of punishment can scarcely provide the protection to which society is entitled; in the other anything, except the most nominal punishment, may effectually prevent the reclamation of the offender, the latter of which, in the advanced spirit of modern penology, is equally important with the former.

The only justifiable argument against leaving the minimum punishments to the discretion of the trial judge is to prevent parties convicted of crime of a henious character from obtaining immunity because of the weakness or dishonesty of judges. It has been well said by a distinguished authority upon this subject that—

> Instances of the former are rare, and of the latter none is believed by us ever to have existed. The purity of our judiciary is one of the things which calumny has as yet left untouched.

This recommendation will be found to be in accordance with the humane spirit of advanced criminal jurisprudence. The early English statutes were proverbially cruel and bloody; the gravest crimes and the most trivial offenses alike invoked the penalty of death. Our own crimes act of 1790 reflected this barbarous spirit and denounced the death penalty for thirteen distinct offenses; but this spirit of vindictive retribution has entirely disappeared. We have abolished the punishment of death in all except three cases—treason, murder, and rape; and have provided that even in these cases in every instance it may be modified by the court or the jury to imprisonment for life. And, as humane judges in England availed themselves of the most technical irregularities in pleadings and proceedings as an excuse for discharging prisoners from the cruel rigors of the common law, so jurors here often refuse to convict for offenses attended with extenuating circumstances rather than submit the offender to what in their judgment is the cruel requirement of a law demanding a minimum punishment. For these reasons the committee adopted these recommendations.

In the fifth place the committee has deemed it wise to make those who are accessories before the fact at common law principal offenders, thereby permitting their indictment and conviction for a substantive offense.

At common law an accessory can not be tried without his consent before the conviction or outlawry of the principal except where the principal and accessory are tried together; if the principal could not be found or if he had been indicted and refused to plead, had been pardoned or died before conviction, the accessory could not be tried at all. This change of the existing law renders these obstacles to justice impossible. An accessory after the fact is herein made subject to one-half of the term of imprisonment or fine imposed upon principals, or where the principal is punishable by death then the punishment for the accessory is fixed at imprisonment for not more than ten years.

These changes are found in the general provisions of the bill and are made in conformity with a general plan indicated on the first page of the bill and are not, therefore, otherwise indicated.

So much with reference to the general scope and provisions of the bill; but before leaving the subject of our Federal criminal code I desire to call the attention of Congress clearly to the existing imperfect system of Federal criminal legislation and to certain consequences that flow from the limitations placed upon the criminal laws of the United States by the decisions of the supreme courts. We have no common law. We can not enforce State laws in the Federal courts. Our jurisdiction is supreme and exclusive over all territory ceded to us by the States under the provisions of the Constitution. Upon the high seas, upon American vessels, and upon all places outside of the jurisdiction of any particular State our citizens must look to our laws alone for protection. We alone can prohibit and punish crimes against all the manifold agencies called into existence by Congress in the execution of its extensive governmental powers and in the protection of the vast army of Government employees employed in the execution of the mandates of our sovereign power.

The scope of this power is rapidly enlarging. Each year the United States Government is making important strides in the assumption and exercise of its recognized constitutional powers and is gradually and necessarily extending its legislation into many fields heretofore left to the exclusive jurisdiction of the States. The extension of its Navy and its expanding foreign commerce have added scope to its admiralty and maritime jurisdiction. The expansion of its postal service, the adoption of new agencies for its distribution, the railway post and rural free delivery, the exercise of its broad powers in subjecting to Federal domination all the instrumentalities of foreign and interstate commerce, the existence of legislation that brings employers and employees engaged in this commerce under the regulation of Federal laws and contemplates the establishment of national quarantine regulations—these, with all their vast and complicated systems of operation, bring within the scope of its territorial jurisdiction new agencies and new subjects for its protection. These facts, together with the enlargement of governmental responsibility by reason of increased population and constantly growing areas of territory brought under its exclusive jurisdiction, all present persuasive, if not controlling, reasons why the great sovereignty of the United States Government should be so armed by a complete and independent criminal code that she may prohibit the infractions of her laws and safeguard and protect thereby her great array of instrumentalities and vast army of agents.

The scope of existing criminal law is inadequate for this purpose. It consists of comparatively few sections and attempts to supply its recognized insufficiency in all that relates to the protection of the life, property, and well-being of the large population otherwise subject to its jurisdiction by a general section which adopts the laws of the various States, and which by legal construction incorporates these laws into the Federal code.

We have seen by previous reference to this kind of legislation that as it now exists it is a makeshift device wrong in principle and altered and amended from time to time to modify its demonstrated inadequacy, and that at the present time considerable areas of populous territories under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States and the Federal laws are entirely outside of its protection.

The objections to this legislation are manifold and apparent. The effect of this provision does not give the Federal courts the power to administer State laws, but is precisely equivalent to an enactment by Congress embracing every offense constituting the criminal code of the various States into the Federal statutes.

Congress, by the enactment of an omnibus section of this kind, almost at one stroke of the pen, writes into its criminal code the laws of forty-six different State legislatures. It trusts itself to their protection blindly and without any knowledge of their scope or of their provisions. It relies upon these laws which it can neither create, alter, amend, nor repeal and which when adopted are rigid, inflexible, and incapable of being adapted to any change in its policy respecting the offenses denounced by them. We know little of the adequacy of these laws for our protection. Many of the States in the Union enjoy, by inheritance or otherwise, the benefits of a common law, some by constitutional provisions; some by general legislative enactments; some by judicial construction. They have, therefore, independent of any statutory enactments, the power to indict and punish all immoral and unlawful acts tending to injure the community. They may, and some of them do, rely upon these, and therefore have no statutes prohibiting serious offenses of which the United States Government under these general provisions could avail itself for its protection.

These facts lead me to indorse the wisdom of the general recommendation of the Commission for the Revision of the Laws that Congress should call into operation the dormant powers of the Constitution and provide for the Federal Government a complete code of criminal law independent of and separate from that of the individual States. The Commission has recommended such a system in their report and have prepared and submitted to Congress a bill seeking to accomplish that purpose, which for reasons hereinbefore set forth your committee has felt itself incompetent to adopt.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having attempted to make clear the inadequacies and imperfections of our present law, and having given in detail the features of the bill before us for consideration and the various changes in the organic law intended to be affected thereby, I can not conclude without urging upon the House what in my judgment is a controlling reason why we should pursue this work of the revision of the laws to its completion, not only by the enactment of the present bill, but by the consummation of the entire revision, which is now before our committee and will shortly be reported.

The permanent laws of the United States of America ought to be the most complete and perfect of any nation in the world, because the distinguishing feature of the American Constitution is that it places its courts above the courts of any other nation of the world.

If I were asked to state in brief form the respect in which the American Constitution differed from that of any other nation that had ever existed, whether of a monarchy or a republic, I would answer that the great departure made by the nation builders in forming this Government was to make its judiciary a distinct organic and coordinate part of that Government and to invest in this great third estate thus created the great power of reviewing the acts of both the legislative and executive.

These permanent laws which we are engaged in perfecting are the necessary machinery of these courts and upon these courts have been placed by the organization of this Government greater power, greater responsibility, and greater dignity than were ever placed upon the courts of any nation of the world.

It is safe to say, as a matter of historical accuracy, that this great, silent, unobtrusive, and inconspicuous power (the judiciary) that bears neither the purse nor the sword, but that controls to an almost immeasurable extent the future destinies of the nation, has in the past accomplished more than its full share in the substantial creation of the sovereignty of this nation.

It is a demonstrable fact, though frequently forgotten, that upon the judiciary of this country rests the distinction of giving life, vitality, and power to the paper-made Constitution of 1789. [Applause.]

A brief reference to the accomplishment of the Supreme Court of the United States in this connection seems to me to be entirely appropriate to this discussion, and does, in my judgment, furnish an added incentive and inspiration to this work. Permit me, therefore, to make brief reference to one conspicuous incident in which this court in the exercise of that great power conferred by the Constitution, and in the application and enforcement of the laws of Congress, established for all time those underlying legal principles of constitutional construction that have made the development of this country possible, and which rose at the same time to a height of broad statesmanship; and so employed the well-nigh limitless power conferred upon it to steer the new-launched American nation over the rocks and reefs upon which she had drifted and bring her through great hazards and fearful dangers safely into port.

The incident referred to is the basis of the leading case in American constitutional law and is familiar to every American lawyer, but its great significance as the first exercise of this newly crowned coordinate power of the Government (the judiciary) in the field of constructive statesmanship and of its salutary and striking achievement in the work of nation building is often entirely overlooked.

Go with me back to the beginning of the last century when Robert Fulton, a boy of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, having read of the great experiments of James Watt in the utilization of fire and steam in propelling an engine, conceived the thought that this great principle might be applied to water navigation. He went to England; became acquainted with Watt; familiarized himself with the principles of the engine. Being without capital he associated with him Robert Livingston, one who, becoming imbued with the spirit of enthusiasm of Fulton agreed to provide the money for his experiments. You remember the story of how the skeptical populace watched the construction of the new boat upon the shores of the Hudson and how, long before the time for its launching, its was ironically characterized as "Fulton's folly." Many efforts failed. Year after year the completion of the new wonder was delayed, until upon a bright morning in 1807 there was launched upon the waters of the Hudson the little Clermont, 140 feet long, 16 feet beam, which sailed along, making the stupendous rate of 5 miles per hour.

In that little boat was represented the commercial development that has made the twentieth century the wonder of the ages. In it lay the potential possibilities of our navy; and in it also lay the germ of those marvelous palaces that cross the ocean with incredible speed, with a passenger list exceeding the population of some of the populous cities of those days. And in the launch of that boat was also contained the germ of the development of the Commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States, The establishment of Federal control over the instrumentalities of commerce, That stupendous power out of which has grown absolutely the stupendous and overmastering prosperity and Commercial supremacy of the United States of America.

The story to-day reads almost like fiction and may be regarded as the romance of commercial development.

For the fostering of this invention and for stimulating this great project the State of New York gave to Fulton and Livingston the exclusive right to operate boats moved by fire or steam upon the waters of New York Bay, Hudson River, and within a marine league. These powers had been originally granted to John Fitch, and he had failed. They were extended by legislation from time to time until, at the time of the perfection of the invention, at the time the Clermont was declared a financial and commercial success, the successor of Fulton and Livingston, one Ogden, held the exclusive right to operate boats moved by steam upon the waters of New York up to the year 1838, with the power of injunction to restrain any other persons in the use of such power and with the extraordinary power of condemning and taking possession of any vessel operated in violation of this law.

The success of this new creation and boundless commercial possiblities of steam navigation of course excited competition and in the course of a year or two other boats had been built and were plying upon the same waters. Two of these boats, owned by one Gibbons, were enrolled and registered under the act of Congress of 1783, providing for the enrolling and registry of vessels engaged in the coastwise trade and fisheries and in 1816, Ogden, the successor to the rights of Fulton and Livingston, granted by the statute of the State of New York, issued his writ of injunction against Gibbons, condemning and taking possession of the vessels for violation of the special privilege granted by the New York statute in accordance with the provisions of the privilege conferred upon him by that act.

In the meantime the enjoyment of this exclusive privilege conferred by the State of New York, had become a matter of great injury to other States. The State of Connecticut in a spirit of retaliation passed a law prohibiting any boat owned or licensed by Fulton's assignees from entering any of her waters. The State of New Jersey passed a law providing that if any citizen of that State should be restrained by New York from using steamboats between the shores of New Jersey and New York, that citizens should be entitled to an action for damages in the State of New Jersey with treble costs and damages against the person so restraining him.

The trial of this noted cause, therefore, involved for the first time directly the impeachment of the laws of a sovereign State by the Supreme Court of the United States. After an extensive trial the chancellor of the State of New York sustained the injunction and the forfeiture, and the case was then carried to the supreme court of errors and appeals in the State of New York, and the decision of the chancellor below was sustained in a learned opinion by the most eminent judicial authority in the land. By this opinion it was judicially established that the several States had jurisdiction over their own waters and that the exclusive grant by the legislature of the State was within the power of the State; that the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States as exercised in the act of 1793, passed in pursuance thereof, did not and could not prohibit the exercise of this power by the individual States.

Accustomed as we are to-day to the universal existence of Federal control of interstate commerce and to the universally recognized legal principles that control it, it is difficult for us to understand how the early judges could have been so misled or to comprehend how any effective legal argument could be made that sought to establish the right of the individual States to limit, restrain, or regulate interstate and foreign commerce or any of the instrumentalities connected therewith. Our views, however, are influenced by the fact now so universally recognized, that any other construction would be utterly destructive to our commercial prosperity; would so completely dissipate our industrial supremacy, and would so inevitably have resulted in the dissolution of the Union of the respective States, that it seems contrary to the processes of human reasoning that such views should ever have been seriously entertained. But the standard of judgment in 1816, when this case was tried in the State of New York, and in 1824, when it was argued before the Supreme Court of the United States in Washington, and the point of view upon these subjects were widely different from what they are to-day.

It was shown in the trial of this case that the act of the legislature of the State of New York granting this exclusive privilege had been approved by John Jay, then governor of New York, and the first Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States; by Chief Justice Lansing of the State of New York, who was one of the leading lawyers sent to the convention that formed the United States Constitution; that it had been approved by the four committees of revision composed of the leading lawyers of that great State who represented the then most advanced legal learning of the country; that it had been decided to be constitutional by the court of Chancery of the State of New York and by the court of Errors and appeals, the highest court of that State, in an opinion of great learning and based upon the soundest legal reasoning of the times. So strong, indeed, was the current of legal authorities that Mr. Webster, in arguing the case for the United States before the United States Supreme Court, admitted that the established current of legal authority was strongly against his position; that the weight of the opinion of the learned judges who had sustained the constitutionality of the act of the State of New York was so great that a heavy burden was upon him to establish by sound legal reasoning upon first principles that the decision of these courts was fundamentally wrong.

In order to obtain a proper conception of the political situation at that time it must not be forgotten that the popular attitude of the country was emphatically opposed to the centralization of power in the General Government. The people everywhere were jealous of State prerogatives. The first attempt to enforce a provision of the Federal Government against a State had created such popular indignation as to result in an amendment to the Constitution. The State of Virginia had refused to obey the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States, which had reversed a decision of her highest court upon the ground that there existed no constitutional power in the Supreme Court of the United States to review the proceedings of a State court.

The recognition of these facts presents forcibly to our minds to-day the stupendous interests then involved and the powerful popular and political influence that controlled the opinions of the country and that were likely to be reflected in the opinions of the courts. In the light of these facts, no one to-day can look upon this case in any other light than as an epoch in our national history—the turning point in our national career—the test of our newly established third power under the Constitution. A case in which the absence of power in the Supreme Court, mistaken judgment, judicial timidity, or partisan infirmity, would have inevitably changed the character of our American nation and have made utterly impossible its present imperial greatness; and would have of necessity resulted in the disintegration of the newly established Government and in the overthrow and destruction of all hope for its success.

The arguments of counsel before the Supreme Court in that case recalls forcibly the temper of the times and the weighty significance of the event. Counsel for the claimants contended that—> in respect to interstate and foreign commerce, local interests and details existed which could not well be presented to or understood by Congress and could be provided for by the State legislatures emanating from the very people to whom they related. This view of the State was exceedingly strengthened when we contemplate the future increase and extent of the Confederacy. The thirteen original States were a band of brothers who suffered, fought, bled, and triumphed together. They might perhaps each have safely confided his separate interests to the general will. But if ever the day should come when Representatives from beyond the Rocky Mountains should sit in this Capitol; if ever the Members of an inland delegation should wield the exclusive power of making the regulations for our foreign commerce without unity of interests or knowledge of our local circumstances, the Union will not stand. It can not stand. It can not be the ordinance of God or nature that it should stand. To give to Congress this exclusive power makes a wreck of State legislation, leaving only a few standing ruins to mark the extent of the desolation.

The eloquent William Wirt, Attorney-General, in reply, uses the following language, significant of the stupendous interest involved and of the mighty issues of this contest. Said he:

> It is a momentous decision that this court is called upon to make. Here are three States almost on the eve of war. It is the high province of this court to interpose its benign and mediatorial influence. The framers of our admirable Constitution would have deserved a wreath of immortality which they have acquired had they done nothing else than establish this guardian tribunal to harmonize the jarring elements of our system. But, sir, if you do not interpose your friendly hand and extirpate the seeds of anarchy which New York has sown, you will have cruel war—the war of legislation which has already commended will become a war of blows. Your country will be shaken with civil strife; your republican institutions will perish in the conflict; your Constitution will fall; the last hope of nations will be gone; the friends of free government throughout the earth will witness our fall with dismay and despair; the arm that is everywhere lifted in the cause of liberty will drop unnerved by the warrior's side. Despotism will have its triumph and will accomplish the purpose at which it clearly aims. It will cover the earth with a wreath of mourning.

It was under these circumstances, in this crisis, amid all these powerful, conflicting conditions, that this great central principle of our Federal Sovereignty and Federal control was forged and shaped. It was the great good fortune of this country that our Constitution-makers had made the Supreme Court a part of its organic system; that it had made it a coordinate power and that it had committed to such a tribunal the decision, final and absolute, of such epoch-making questions. It was also fortunate for the United States that at that time there occupied the chair of the Chief Justice a man of the wisdom, patriotism, statesmanship, and courage of John Marshall; a man able to rise above the seething currents of popular prejudice, to view from the serene light of fundamental legal principles the effect of his decision upon the future history of his country; a man possessed of sufficient political sagacity to extend by judicial construction three words in the Federal Constitution, the words in the general enumeration of the powers of Congress, "to regulate commerce," into a complete and extensive system of Federal control of commercial instrumentalities; to declare judicially and finally that commerce comprehends navigation within the limits of every State in the Union, so far as navigation is connected with commerce with foreign nations and between the States, and to declare as a fixed principle that the power of Congress to regulate interstate and foreign commerce is exclusive and that the inland waters and great transportation lines were avenues of commerce and under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States for that purpose.

Thus the national power to regulate interstate commerce, that great principle which confessedly is the source of our stupendous material development, is the absolute creation of the Supreme Court of the United States, and its existence to-day as the basis of our industrial and commercial power is not due to any wise, fearless, and sagacious President of the United States, nor to the wisdom and constructive ability of any Congress of the United States, but it owes its existence as a great cardinal principle of national development to the matchless statesmanship, broad learning, and dauntless courage of John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States.

In fact, the achievements of the judiciary of this country has contributed so marvelously and wonderfully to its permanent establishment that the student of American history searching for the great builders of this nation must add to the names of a Washington, an Adams, and a Jefferson, those of a Marshall, a Story, and a Jay.

These permanent laws are the necessary machinery of that court. Let us perfect them by the complete revision they so urgently require. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it would seem almost useless after the very unusual and very able speech made by the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to add anything in regard to the bill that is now before the committee for consideration. But it may be that some have come in since the gentleman started his remarks to whom it will be well to call attention to the purposes of the bill, and also to speak of one or two things that have of necessity escaped the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Before going into a discussion of the bill, I want to second the remarks made by the gentleman as to the supreme importance of this bill. It is unfortunately dry; it is unfortunately technical; but it does really represent the most important work given to government; for, in my humble judgment, the real purpose of government is to do justice between man and man, and whenever it goes outside of that plane it enters upon dangerous and uncertain ground and with a result frequently more harmful than beneficial.

We live under a peculiar Government, due to its dual character and limited power. We have to determine in this country not only what we ought to do, but what we can do, because we have a Government limited both as to which sovereignty shall exercise the power and limited also as to what matters can be dealt with at all. The one important original idea contained in the Constitution of the United States is the supremacy that is given to the judiciary. The thing that makes our Constitution unique from every one in the world is the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States is given power to say if the other branches of the Government have exceeded their power; has the right to declare null and void an act of the Legislature of the National Government; has the right to have disregarded the action of the Executive when it is beyond his power; and has the further right to say when the States have exceeded their sovereign powers. That is the greatest power ever given to a tribunal, and it is, as I have said, the one great characteristic of the American Constitution, and to it we owe more of the stability and grandeur of this country than to any other provision in that instrument.

Those who have read the history of America know that the real law of America is what finally exists after the statutes have been construed and passed upon by the courts of the land, that what passes Congress does not necessarily become the law of the land. Through the decisions of the Supreme Court the Constitution, open to many constructions, was so interpreted as to create a nation with power over matters of national importance and at the same time to preserve the sovereign States and their sovereignty over those matters peculiarly pertaining to the respective States and not to the nation at large. There have been times when the decisions of this court in the performance of its great functions have aroused great excitement and at times great indignation; but with the exception of the Dred Scott case nearly every decision of that court undertaking to lay down the limits of national and State power has met with the final approval of the American people; and today it may not be inappropriate, when it has become the fashion of some of those in high places to criticise the judiciary, to call attention to these facts. Certainly, no man from my section of the country should ever care to utter a condemnation of the judiciary, for when passion ran riot, when men had lost their judgment, when the results of four years of bitter war produced legislation aimed not at justice, but frequently at punishment, it was the Supreme Court that stood between the citizen and his liberties and the passion of the hour. [Applause.] And I trust the day will never come when the American people will not be willing to submit respectfully and gladly to the decrees of that august tribunal. Temporarily they may seem to thwart the will of the people, but in their final analysis they will make, as they have made, for orderly government, for a government of laws and not of men, and we may be sure that the Supreme Court in the pure atmosphere of judicial inquiry that has always surrounded it will arrive at a better interpretation of the powers of both State and National Governments than can be possibly hoped for in a forum like this, where popular prejudice and the passions of the hour affect all of us, whether we will or no.

Now, gentlemen, this particular bill relates only to the general criminal laws of the United States. And I want to emphasize what it contains by stating what it does not contain. It does not touch anything regarding procedure. It has nothing to do with the question that has been agitated looking to a change of the jurisdictions of the circuit and district courts. Those matters will properly come under the judiciary title, which we hope to bring before the House before many weeks. It in no sense relates to officers, clerks, fees, or anything affecting the organization of the courts. It does not contain quite a number of penal provisions. Those provisions relating to internal revenue, relating to customs, relating to many other subjects that are a part of the substantive civil law, have not been carried into this revision.

The Commission undertook, when it first started upon its work, to embody all criminal law in this code—for instance, the penal laws in regard to internal revenue—but the members of that Commission soon discovered that it was impossible, without a complete duplication of laws, to effect that result. While the internal-revenue laws are full of many important penal provisions, they are always so intimately connected with the administrative features of that law that it is impossible to separate them, and we have not undertaken to do it.

I shall, subsequently, under the leave that I shall ask for, print a statement showing the general laws of the United States having criminal provisions not separable from the context, which are not included in the penal code. They relate to many departments and many subjects. We have, however, taken all the penal laws of a general nature and brought them together in this codification.

You have already been told the history of this Commission that was given charge of this work originally, how its powers were enlarged from those relating only to the criminal code until they embraced all of the substantive law of the United States. That Commission has made its final report, and it is the hope that either the Committee on Revision of Laws of the House or the joint committee of the two Houses, if it shall be continued, may bring to the attention of Congress from time to time the various parts of this general codification or revision, so that we may adopt one revision that shall embrace all of the existing law of America and that the disgrace which now exists in regard to our law shall be done away with. Surely one of the reasons for the criticisms that are sometimes thoughtlessly urged against the courts is because of the ignorance of the public generally as to the law and also because of the very loose and careless way in which we enact law in this body. It is impossible for a body of this size to give that attention to style and to expression that should be given to make easy the enforcement of the laws. We turn out legislation here every day that defies the brightest intellects to determine exactly what was meant and that can not be properly enforced until after a series of adjudications by the highest court of the land.

Now, perhaps it is needless for those of you who know my mental make-up to be told that the attitude of myself toward this work has been one against the creation of new law, but it is proper to add that I found that attitude to be held by all the other members of the committee. We have not undertaken to usurp the jurisdictions of the various committees of this House. So careful were we not to do that that in certain instances where we had new penal sections that we thought ought to be enacted we submitted them to the Judiciary Committee of this House for their views upon them before embodying them in this revision. We have made no change in existing law in the way of new enactment that was not plainly in furtherance of the existing law. No question that involved a policy, no question about which there might be differences of opinion, politically or otherwise, has been embodied in this work. We have taken laws, for instance, relating to counterfeiting and so written them as to embrace new methods of counterfeiting. We have, in other words, modernized certain penal laws, so worded them as to meet the exigencies of the day, and in a few instances, where the Departments have reported to us a failure of justice because of some defect in a particular law, we have undertaken to remedy that, but we have in no way attempted to bring into this revision new laws that should properly come from other committees.

As stated by the distinguished chairman of the committee, out of 174 sections reported by the Commission but 21 were put into this revision by the committee.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. And only ten carrying new law.

Mr. SHERLEY. And, as suggested by the chairman, only ten of these carried what might really be called new law. In the report, which is very carefully drawn, will be found an accurate statement of these new sections and all they pertain to.

We have two sections under the titles of "Offenses against the operation of the Government," section 33 relating to false acknowledgment and section 47 relating to unlawful entering forts, etc. Those were the result of recommendations made to us by Departments and not simply an expression of our views of the needs of such legislation. Then we have "Offenses against official duties." Section 107 relates to falsely certifying the records of deeds. Section 108 relates to other false certificates. In "Offenses against public justice" we have a provision in regard to a juror or judicial officer accepting a bribe. We have a provision in regard to a witness accepting a bribe and a provision in regard to a prisoner who escapes or attempts to escape. Under "Offenses against currency and coinage" we have made it an offense to connect parts of different instruments. There has grown up a practice among some criminals in the country to take different parts of a bill and by putting them together to create apparently a bill of a higher denomination and of greater value. There was no law under which such offenders could be punished, and the committee have properly recommended such a law. And in offenses against the postal service there is a section regarding a false claim to a registered letter.

Perhaps no subject that we have to deal with has given as much trouble to the committee as the subject of the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States. The Federal Government obtains its jurisdiction over most subjects and places within such jurisdiction by virtue of three provisions of the Constitution. First, from that provision in section 8 relating to any land that is set apart for the exclusive use of the United States, like a fort, arsenal, dock yard, etc. That section has been so enlarged by judicial construction as to embrace practically all the different kinds of land now owned by the National Government. Secondly, the Government gets jurisdiction in penal matters under the admiralty and maritime provision of the Constitution, and, lastly, it obtains jurisdiction under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

An examination of the existing law, as well as the decisions pertaining to them, will show that there is no general definition undertaking to precisely define the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States. Certain statutes give a very much broader jurisdiction than others. This has not been because of a desire to restrict the jurisdiction, but it has been due to uncertainty as to what the jurisdiction was and the language which should be employed in regard to defining that jurisdiction in its fullest sense. We have therefore undertaken to provide a general section which sets out the jurisdiction of the United States and relies for its power not upon any one but upon all three of these provisions of the Constitution for its constitutionality. And I particularly hope that the lawyers of this body will examine with peculiar care that section and let the committee and the House have the benefit of their investigation. I am quite sure that there is no member of the committee who feels entirely satisfied with his research in that regard. While we have presented what we believe is a proper section, properly designating this jurisdiction, it is a very great question, and its consideration involves a labor far beyond what might be expected from a cursory study of the subject.

We hope that Members will give it their special attention, because it is peculiarly important that we should have such a general definition and we should know beyond question where the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in this character of cases extends.

In regard to piracy and other offenses upon the seas, we have added a section defining vessels of the United States. As to certain offenses in the Territories, we have designated places within which certain sections shall apply.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state—I have not examined that section of the bill to find vessels of the United States—but I wish the gentleman would state that very briefly. Under existing law, I think it is an offense against the Federal Government for any citizen to commit a crime upon any boat owned in whole or in part by an American citizen, notwithstanding its registry. My understanding is that the nationality of a boat is determined by its registry and not by the question of ownership. That is a problem which has given me not embarrassment, but involved my judgment in a good deal of uncertainty, and it occurs to me that we have no more criminal jurisdiction over a boat simply on account of the ownership by an American citizen than we would have over a farm in Russia because of the fact that it might be owned by an American citizen.

Mr. SHERLEY. In answer to the gentleman I will say that we provide that a vessel of the United States shall be—

Any vessel belonging in whole or in part to a citizen of the United States or to any corporation created by or under the laws of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or district thereof.

The gentleman is mistaken in his statement that the registry of a vessel determines the country to which it belongs. So far as the penal laws are concerned, the recent decisions are, as I understand, to the effect that ownership, and not the flag that flies, determines the jurisdiction of our courts.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It may be that the gentleman is correct, but my understanding was different. Suppose a boat is registered as a Belgian vessel and flies the Belgian flag and is owned in part by a citizen of the United States. Which country then would have criminal jurisdiction upon the deck of that vessel, the United States or Belgium?

Mr. SHERLEY. My understanding is that the registry and the flag are evidences of the country to which the ship belongs, but that they are not conclusive evidences of the fact, and that our courts have held that where the ownership is partially that of an American citizen, and certainly where it is wholly that of an American citizen, without regard to registry or flag, it is subject to our laws and within our jurisdiction.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Suppose it is owned one-fourth by an American citizen and three-fourths by people of Belgium. Which country, I would like to know, would have jurisdiction, or would both?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me ask this question, and perhaps that will settle it. Could such a vessel be treated as an American vessel within the meaning of the statute under any circumstances?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. He describes it as one in his bill—owned in whole or in part.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. "Owned in whole or in part" is intended, I suppose, to cover a multitude of owners. Of course the general statute is that no vessel is entitled to American registry unless owned fully by an American citizen.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is now dealing with the question of what entitles a vessel to registry or enrollment or license, which is an entirely different question from that of the jurisdiction of the Government applying to the vessel. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that the provision I have just read him is all contained in one of the statutes of existing law, and while I am not prepared on the moment to say that in the case suggested by the gentleman, where one-fourth of the ownership was American and three-fourths Belgian, that the Federal Government would have control, my impression is that while we, of course, could not affect Belgium, and what rights she might undertake to assert under her jurisdiction, yet the recent decisions do give jurisdiction over a vessel under these circumstances. The gentleman's question, however, aside from the poor information I have been able to give him, is of value in illustrating the difficulty of the questions presented to us, and it is in those matters that we particularly desire the aid of the Members of the House.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That gives concurrent jurisdiction, I should say, on that theory.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then, we have had added, under the title of "General provisions," five sections, one defining felonies and misdemeanors, which has been carefully explained by the chairman. It simply provides that where the punishment may be for a longer period than one year the crime shall be treated as a felony; otherwise as a misdemeanor; and it is unnecessary, in view of what has already been stated, for me to go into an explanation of the reason for that.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman to turn to section 85, page 92. I would like to have his opinion as to whether or not that language is not somewhat ambiguous. It is dealing with the question of the contribution of national banks to political funds, and it strikes me that the language of the section is too broad, and may defeat the object of the section. I want the gentleman's opinion on that. The Supreme Court, if the gentleman will remember, has just decided that—in the employers' liability case, in which Congress attempted to deal with State and national jurisdictions at one and the same time. The language of this section would seem to me to be open to the same objection, inasmuch as it says:

It shall also be unlawful for any corporation whatever to make a money contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors or a Representative in Congress is to be voted for, or any election by any State legislature of a United States Senator—

Or any State election, whatever the language is.

What occurred to me was that a contribution might be made for the purpose of electing a county officer or some other officer at that same election; and if it was held that Congress could not punish for that, the whole section might fail.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the gentleman, he is referring to section 85 of the proposed law.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to the gentleman, first, is that the section is existing law. Secondly, in regard to its unconstitutionality, I think the gentleman is in error. The section does not deal with any person. If the section undertook to punish any person for contributions made to elections without regard to whether they were Federal or State, it would clearly be broader than the powers of Congress and unconstitutional. But the section is limited in its application to corporations created under authority of Congress, national banks, and so forth, and I am inclined to believe, being limited to those creatures of the National Congress, that Congress would have the right to put such restrictions upon them both as to Federal and as to State elections and make their violation penal. I answer the gentleman now simply by saying that the section is existing law, and of course, on the spur of the moment, the gentleman can hardly expect me to be able to go into detailed argument of any section in the code. I think that his criticism is not well founded, but when the section is reached I should be glad to have the matter called to the attention of the committee.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would like to call one part of it to the gentleman's attention right now. Under this section, and in view of the gentleman's explanation of the section, what would be the effect of this corporation making a contribution for the election of a county clerk, we will say, in an election at which a Representative was to be elected?

Mr. SHERLEY. If the proof was obtained and the corporation proceeded against—two propositions sometimes unfortunately ignored—I have no doubt a proper jury would return a verdict of guilty and the corporation would be fined in accordance with the provisions of the section. In other words, I think the section is constitutional.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Referring to page 12, section 19, I find it reads—

> If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States * * * they shall be fined not more than $5,000, etc.

What I wanted to ask the gentleman is this, Would that clause in its present language constitute a trade union a conspiracy whenever it undertook by strike or similar process to secure higher wages from an employer?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's question, I think, can be answered in one word. No. That section is, perhaps, in many ways, the most important section in the criminal law of the United States. There is no section of the law that has been as often construed by the Supreme Court as that. It was a section contained in the civil-rights act, and was originally passed aiming at the Ku Klux conditions that were said to exist in the South at that time. But its terms were very much broader than the condition it sought to deal with, and its constitutionality has been repeatedly upheld by the Supreme Court, particularly in the Cruikshank case, and the section has been held to apply to a great many different conspiracies. But I have never heard it intimated that it would embrace such a condition as stated by the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am induced to ask the question because of the fact that we have in the northern district of West Virginia at the present time a restraining order issued by Judge Dayton, restraining the mine workers' organization from inducing the employees of a certain coal company to join the United Mine Workers of America. And that would indicate in the eyes of the world at the present time a constituted conspiracy.

Mr. SHERLEY. By no means. An injunction is not a criminal process, and it does not follow that because such an injunction has been issued that the basis for it is this particular section. Of course, I can only give the gentleman my opinion. I can not say what the courts will hold this section to embrace, but I have no idea it will ever be held to embrace such a case as stated by the gentleman.

To come back, Mr. Chairman, to my statement, another section that we have embodied in the penal code is in regard to the construction of certain words, such as that the singular shall include the plural, etc.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask the gentleman a question here?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. On this portion of your work under which you have discussed construction I would like to ask a question; and I premise by saying I have prepared, somewhat hastily, an amendment that I thought possibly I might offer—that the rule of the common law that criminal statutes shall be strictly construed shall not be applied to the construction under this code, but its provisions shall be liberally construed by court and jury so as to prevent evasion and promote justice, and no assignment of error shall be considered unless a substantial right has been impaired. Is there anything in the code in the matter relating to construction that is at all similar to this proposition?

Mr. SHERLEY. There is not. I think, if the gentleman will permit the suggestion, his proposition, which is a very interesting one, is really divisible, and that which relates to the abolition of the rule that holds that a penal statute shall be construed strictly would properly come under the section relating to definitions, and so forth; that which relates to what shall be considered as error on appeal should probably go to the section relating to procedure. But, as a general answer to the gentleman's question, I would further say that while I think there has been a grave abuse in the administration of the law, or rather a great laxity, and that the doctrine that ninety-nine guilty men should go free rather than one innocent man should be punished has been worked overtime, I am not quite prepared to say that the penal law should be construed in a lax or liberal way, but rather that the citizen ought to be protected in all his rights, for the lawmaking body not only undertakes frequently to make punishable what is malum per se, but also what is simply malum prohibitum. The law should be plain enough to apprise the citizen of the offense created and then construed strictly, but also so as to promote justice to both the Government and the accused.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman will see that I did not make it so that it was merely a liberal construction, but so as to prevent evasion and promote justice.

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to the distinguished gentleman is that the Supreme Court in a number of cases has, in speaking of that very rule relative to the construction of a penal statute, held as I have just stated, that by construing it strictly was meant not a construction depriving it of proper force, but a construction in accordance with justice not only to the Government but to the individual.

Mr. HEPBURN. But the gentleman will remember that the great multitude of technicalities through which criminal justice or the administration of criminal justice becomes a farce arise out of that rule of construction and out of the insistence that criminal statutes shall be strictly construed.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think the gentleman gives undue importance to that particular rule. A large part of the failure of justice is due to a mistaken sentimentality on the part of jurors, a large part of it to the ignorance of the prosecuting officers, and a very large part to technicalities distinct from the rule of construction that the gentleman speaks of.

In the next new section we propose the elimination of the words "hard labor" from all statutes, so as to leave the matter in the discretion of the court. By this I do not mean that we propose to authorize the court to impose hard labor in the sentence imposed, but by designating the particular penitentiary at which the person convicted shall be confined to indirectly do it. Such convicted person will be amenable to the discipline of that penitentiary, and if it be one in which hard labor is part of the discipline, the Federal prisoner will have to undergo hard labor. The last section simply states that the jurisdiction of the circuit and district court shall be as heretofore. The judicial title when it is brought in will contain a provision changing the jurisdiction of those courts, but that is not affected in this revision.

Mr. Chairman, nothing further occurs to me at present as necessary to add to the elaborate statement made by the chairman of the committee. I shall be glad to answer any inquiry that I may, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] and myself have failed to make clear just the purport and scope of this bill. If, however, no gentleman desires to make an inquiry I shall not consume any more of the time of the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reiterate the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in the beginning of his remarks, which was appropriate then, and which is doubly appropriate now, "that it seems unnecessary, after the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] to take up time in going into any detailed account of this pending legislation." However, as a member of the House Committee on the Revision of the Laws and the joint committee that has submitted this unanimous report, I feel impelled to offer a few reasons why, to my mind, this House should consider and pass the bill now under consideration by the Committee of the Whole.

The interests that are involved in the passage of this bill are not such as ordinarily attach to the passage of a bill on any given subject. Urgent as often is the consideration and passage of a law because of the great interest at stake, it usually involves one subject and affects one particular class of interests. It is not so with this bill. Its effect is far-reaching. It sets out the law governing all men subject to the jurisdiction of the United States. No partisan spirit is involved in the consideration of this measure. It is one that we approach the consideration of with absolute freedom from party bias. It is one that involves the interest of our entire citizenship; and to the extent that it is aware of the condition of our law the country is calling for this legislation. And this bill will be considered, I confidently believe, in a spirit of broad patriotism such as I feel naturally controls the American citizen whenever called on seriously to consider the interest of the whole country.

The history of the legislation in regard to the revision and codification of the laws of the United States has been so clearly and accurately set forth in the remarks made by the distinguished gentlemen from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] and Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that it is unnecessary to go into the details, only to the extent of calling attention to the prominent general facts of legislation and the work under the same that have preceded the preparation and introduction of this bill by the joint committee. And it is my purpose to-day only to call the attention of this body to some prominent facts connected with this subject that are well known to those who have taken the pains to investigate it, and that have become manifest and familiar to those of us who have been engaged in this tedious work.

In 1897 the law was passed providing for the appointment of a Commission to revise and codify the laws, applying only to the revision and codification of the criminal laws of the United States. In 1899 by Congressional enactment the work of the Commission was enlarged by adding to the same the revision and codification of the judiciary act and its amendments. In 1901 there was included in the work of this Commission the duty to revise and codify all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when it shall make its report, as is set out in said act of March 3, 1901, as follows:

That the Commission authorized by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1898, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1897, to revise and codify the criminal and penal laws of the United States, is hereby directed to revise and codify, in accordance with the terms and provisions of said act and the acts supplementary thereto, all laws of the United States of a permanent and general nature in force at the time when the same shall be reported.

That in performing this duty the said Commission shall bring together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subjects, shall omit redundant and obsolete enactments, and shall make such alterations as may be necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text; and may propose and embody in such revisions changes in the substance of existing law; but all such changes shall be clearly set forth in an accompanying report, which shall briefly explain the reasons for the same.

That the said Commission shall arrange such revision under titles, chapters, and sections, or other suitable divisions and subdivisions with headnotes briefly expressive of the matter contained in such division, and with marginal notes so drawn as to point to the contents of the text, and with references to the original text from which each section is compiled, and to the decisions of the courts of the United States explaining or construing the same; and shall provide by an index for an easy reference to every portion of such revision.

That when the Commission have completed such revision in accordance herewith, it shall cause a copy of the same, in print, to be submitted to Congress, that the statutes so revised and codified may be reenacted if Congress shall so determine.

This Commission that was created in 1897 engaged in this work and its final report was made in December, 1906, at the mandate of an act of Congress passed in June, 1906. The committee of the House has given much time to the consideration of the report of that Commission. Also the joint committee of the Senate and House has given it much industrious and laborious thought, the result of which is the submission of this bill to the consideration of this body. There has been much discussion and consideration in the two committees—that is, the House committee and the joint committee—during the sittings and work of the two committees, as to the nature and scope of the work devolved upon the Commission in the first place and to the extent to which this committee should go in the recommendation of changes in existing law. Naturally there was some variance of opinion in the outset as to the extent we should go and the power given us under the law providing for the work of revision, and I suppose it is not improper or unparliamentary to mention the varying conditions of mind and judgment that the membership of this committee underwent as we progressed in the work. The idea that we should only prepare a compilation and codification of the existing law, which some Members of this House now seem to entertain, had some adherents at the outset, but the study of the acts and resolutions creating the Commission and afterwards extending its powers, I think, convinced our committee that under these laws and resolutions we were empowered to recommend the correction, the amendment, and the changing of existing laws where the same were manifestly needed. This view was afterwards modified to some extent, or rather, I should say, action under this view became more and more conservative as we proceeded with the work. And while I have thought we were too conservative in some instances, but this conservatism was caused by the great desire that we should submit a bill as free from objection and criticism as we could make it. This anxious desire on the part of the committee came from a deep and abiding consciousness of the great need of the passage by this Congress of a revision and codification of the law that would be clear, accurate, and in convenient form to the lawyer and layman without a search through the desultory enactments that to-day embrace the criminal laws of the United States.

The necessity for present legislation such as is involved in the passage of this bill is realized and called for by the legal profession in every part of this country. They want an accurate and an available means of determining what the law is. They want the confusion that now exists clarified and set out in a concise publication of the law of the land. They have a right to this. The burdens attendant upon the practice of law and involved in the extensive labor and research absolutely necessary to find out what the law is as it now exists is a cause of complaint to the entire profession, and they are entitled to relief from this condition. They are calling for this from one end of the land to the other. The profession is entitled to a systematic and accurate compilation of the law formulated in the most convenient manner possible. No legislation could relieve this class of our citizens more readily from the burdens and exactions of unnecessary labor than the enactment of this or similar legislation. But this relief from labor, this relief from confusion, annoyance, and perplexity to that class of our people engaged in the practice of the law in the courts of the United States, great and crying as that need is, is by no means the strongest reason for the passage of this bill. The great body of the people of this nation who are amenable to the Federal law of the country, the great mass of our people bound to obey this law and liable to punishment for its violation, have a right to know what the law is, and they are entitled to every means that would facilitate that knowledge. It is an old maxim of the law that "Everyone is presumed to know the law." This maxim, hoary with age and necessarily and absolutely correct in legal interpretation as it is, is often commented upon and referred to in irreverent tone, and denominated as a most violent presumption. This just and correct maxim often impresses the layman as a travesty upon law and as a proposition utterly inconsistent with the experience of mankind. The justness of a criticism of this kind is very striking when the written law of the land is as confused, desultory, and difficult of search as it stands in the written statutes of the United States to-day. It is hard to impose upon the laymen obedience to a law that the lawyer can not find.

The fact alone, Mr. Chairman, that in order to keep up with the laws that define offenses and denominate crimes a man must read all the appropriation bills passed by each successive Congress is enough to convince us of the urgent and crying need for a collection and revision of the criminal laws of the land. The laws that create many of the offenses defined in our statutes are hidden away in appropriation bills in such manner as to be almost undiscoverable, with nothing in the title of the bill or its subject that would give the least index or indication that it contained such a statute creating a public offense, the commission of which offense subjects an American citizen to fine and imprisonment.

This extract, taken from the report of the joint committee, shows the present form of our published statutes:

The present condition of the published statute laws of the United States affords ample justification for the imperative existing demand for prompt action upon the part of Congress in enacting this revision.

The published statutes of the United States—the only available form in which they exist—for judicial, professional, or public use or information are contained in the following books:

1. Revised Statutes, 1878.
2. First Supplement to Revised Statutes.
3. Second Supplement to Revised Statutes.
4. Statutes at Large, volumes 32, 33, and 34.

To all except the trained lawyer a reference to these recognized sources of existing law is both perplexing and misleading. They are of widely different authority, authenticity, and evidential value. A brief explanation of the contents of these respective volumes will be of value in this connection.

And I suggest the careful reading of the explanations set out in the report following the above extract.

In order to direct your attention to a brief and concise statement of the scope and extent of this measure I submit to you a short extract from the report of the joint committee containing a summary of the work of the committee in formulating this bill:

Your committee feels justified in saying that under this title it has—

First. Brought together all statutes and parts of statutes relating to the same subject.

Second. Omitted redundant and obsolete enactments.

Third. Made such alterations as seemed necessary to reconcile the contradictions, supply the omissions, and amend the imperfections of the original text.

Fourth. Proposed and embodied in the revision such changes in the substance of existing law as in our judgment were necessary and advisable.

We have by no means embraced in this bill all the changes in the criminal law that we might approve under separate enactment. We have failed to include many recommendations of the Commission that we would support as a special bill, but for the reasons already mentioned they are not included in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the imperative necessity for this revision must be patent to every Member of this House. It is a fact that the lawmakers of this Government have been strangely remiss in this character of legislation, and the dereliction of the past and the resulting confusion and difficulty emphasize the importance of the present enactment of a systematic, uniform, and convenient code of laws.

Let me briefly call your attention to the history of the legislation on this subject as set out in the report submitted by the House Committee on the Revision of Laws to the Fifty-ninth Congress, as follows:

A brief history of the criminal legislation of the United States will be of interest in this connection.

The first criminal code enacted was passed at the second session of the First Congress, and became a law on April 30, 1790. It contained thirty-three sections and was modeled largely after the criminal laws of England, and provided punishment for treason, piracy, murder, arson, and other conspicuous common-law crimes. This act was passed in the full belief by the legal profession and the judiciary of that time that the courts of the United States, created by the judicial act of 1789, had common-law jurisdiction, and that independent of the statutes all crimes against the sovereignty of the United States could be punished.

Justice Story himself contended that the circuit court, by the judicial act of 1789, had cognizance of all offenses against the United States, and having cognizance of all offenses against the United States, might punish them by fine or imprisonment where no punishment was specifically provided by statute.

This belief was finally overthrown in 1812, when the United States Supreme Court announced, as a fundamental doctrine of construction, that the Federal courts have no criminal common-law jurisdiction; that they can exercise such powers only as are conferred upon them by Congress; that no act can be punished as a crime against the United States unless Congress has declared it a crime and prescribed its punishment and designated the court which shall have jurisdiction of the offense; but that where the act of Congress punishes an offense without defining it otherwise than by giving it a common-law designation the courts must look to the common law for the definition and elements of the offense.

The overthrow of this common-law theory revealed the inadequacy of the criminal provisions contained in the act of 1790 and resulted in an immediate agitation by the legal profession and the judiciary for an amplification of the criminal laws. It was declared that half of the most notorious crimes which the General Government was alone competent to redress were beyond the reach of judicial punishment.

After much agitation upon this subject, the act of 1825, drawn by Justice Story and introduced by Daniel Webster, was passed. This act, as originally introduced, contained 70 sections of new law, but owing to the indifference of Congress and the difficulty of securing legislation, after it had passed the Senate and two attempts to secure its passage by the House had failed, it was cut down to 26 sections, and then passed by both Houses and became the law. These new sections related chiefly to offenses upon the high seas and counterfeiting. These 26 sections, in addition to the 33 sections already existing, constituted a criminal code of 59 sections. The insufficiency of the legislation contained in this law was keenly felt by the courts and the profession generally, and was attempted to be supplied by a provision in the law of 1825, section 3, which provided that if any offense was committed in any place ceded to or under the jurisdiction of the United States the punishment of which was not provided for by any law of the United States, it should receive the punishment prescribed by the law of the State in which the place is situated for like offenses.

The limitation of this provision seems to have been imperfectly understood at the time, and its subsequent judicial construction so narrowed its operation as to make it largely inoperative for this purpose. It was held in the case of United States v. Paul, 6 Peters, 141, that the laws of the States therein referred to could be only such laws as were in existence in the various States at the time of the passage of this act, to wit, March 3, 1825, and that Congress could not delegate to a State legislature the power to enact laws that could be enforced in a Federal court.

Then began new legislation upon this subject. Acts were passed from time to time as practical demonstration was afforded of the insufficiency of existing law and to meet the expanding operations of the Government as the scope of governmental agencies expanded with the increasing wealth and multiplied instrumentalities of administration.

A decision of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered in 1866 still further limited the scope of this provision to territory owned by the United States at the time of its passage, March 3, 1825.

But no revision of the laws was ever attempted until the revision of 1873, before alluded to. By this time the various sections under the title "Crimes" had reached the number of 229, covering many subjects unprovided for in the meager enactments of 1790 and 1825. Substantially all of these various sections were reenacted at the time of that revision; but, owing to the policy adopted by the committee of revision of 1873, which precluded the introduction of any new legislation, no new provisions were made at that time; but section 5391 was adopted, which was similar to the provision included in the act of March 3, 1825, being modified only to make it conform to the limitation imposed by the Supreme Court decision, namely, to acts then in force in the various States, and to subsequently acquired territory, and also providing that no subsequent repeal of the State laws should interfere with their enforcement by the United States court. The language of that section is as follows:

"If any offense be committed in any place which has been, or may hereafter be, ceded to and under the jurisdiction of the United States, which offense is not prohibited, or the punishment thereof is not specially provided for, by any law of the United States, such offense shall be liable to, and receive, the same punishment as the laws of the State in which such place is situated, now in force, provided for like offense when committed within the jurisdiction of such State; and no subsequent repeal of any such State law shall affect any prosecution for such offense in any court of the United States."

This section was practically reenacted on July 7, 1898, but with one important and serious omission—doubtless the result of oversight and hasty legislation—the omission of the provision subjecting to the jurisdiction of these laws territory acquired by the United States subsequent to its enactment, the result of which is that the protection to be afforded by this general provision incorporating State laws in the Federal statutes is not extended to any territory acquired by the Government since July 7, 1898.

As it was necessary that the Ten Commandments given to the children of Israel should be written on tables of stone in order that these chosen people of the Lord should have a clear and distinct statement of the commandments of the Almighty, that they should distinctly have before them for study and understanding in systematic order and convenient form the ten rules of law or commandments that must be obeyed and observed by them, so it is necessary that every civilization or nation should have a clear, concise statement of the laws that are to control and regulate the people of that nation. And that country that has the most perfect, simple, and convenient expression and form of its laws has attained the highest end for the guidance and direction of its people. I trust this Congress will take the time and devote the labor necessary to a full consideration and final passage of this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the matter to which I desire to direct the attention of the committee is not exactly germane to the bill pending, though undoubtedly a vigorous enforcement of our criminal laws would probably have prevented some of the calamities which have recently befallen some of our great financial institutions.

We all know that for weeks the country has been in the throes of a most disastrous financial panic. It is not my purpose to discuss who is responsible for this panic, though one could easily give high Republican authority for the statement that the present Republican President, because of certain policies he has advocated, is directly responsible for the many calamities visited upon the country as the result of the panic. In fact, the senior Senator from Ohio has repeatedly charged that our Republican President is blamable for the financial panic which now afflicts the country. Yes, Mr. Chairman, there are numerous leaders, old-time leaders of the Republican party, many of whom are upon this floor, who secretly entertain and frequently express in private the same opinion.

But as I said, it is not my purpose to discuss the question as to who is responsible for the panic. Neither do I desire to discuss the causes of this panic, undoubtedly now on us, notwithstanding we have heard it asserted innumerable times here that a panic never occurred under a Republican Administration. What I now desire to bring to the attention of the committee and the country is the remedy proposed to alleviate the unfortunate condition which now presses upon our country. When the Congress convened everyone was interested to know what measures of relief would be brought forward by the dominant party to correct the trouble and prevent its recurrence. The Congress convened early in December, remained in session for a number of days, the time frittering away, and nothing was done. Notwithstanding the fact that on the first or second day of the session, I believe it was, the Committee on Banking and Currency was precipitately announced, the Congress adjourned for the holidays without bringing forward any suggestion of relief. The Congress reassembled the first day of the present week, and the country has been upon tiptoe of expectancy, awaiting the measures of relief, so sorely needed, to be suggested by the dominant party.

Day before yesterday the senior Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. ALDRICH, leader of the dominant party in the Senate, introduced the relief bill which I presume reflects the will of the Republican party upon this subject. The senior Senator from Texas, Mr. CULBERSON, the minority leader upon the floor of the Senate, introduced certain bills relating to banking and currency which reflect the views of a Democrat as to what should be enacted into law in order to avert the recurrence of financial panics.

It is a matter of the deepest concern to the people whether these measures will accomplish their intended purpose, and especially do they want to know whether the bills are in the interest of a particular class, a special class, or whether they are in the interest of all the people. Mr. Chairman, bearing on this point, I now send to the Clerk's desk and desire to have read a leading editorial which I have taken from a paper, one of the prominent newspapers of our country, a paper formerly of Democratic persuasion. As is well known, this paper maintains an editorial staff of able writers, and undoubtedly one of the ablest on the staff has considered these measures now brought forward by the Republican leader and the Democratic leader and treats of them in this editorial. In my opinion the editorial is well timed, and——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. What paper is it?

Mr. BURLESON. The New York World. It was formerly a Democratic paper, but it is now an independent journal. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[New York World, Thursday, January 9, 1908.]

A GOOD BILL AND A BAD BILL.

The currency and banking bills of Senator CULBERSON and Senator ALDRICH represent divergent schools of economics, policy, and thought. The Culberson bills are very good and the Aldrich bill is bad.

The Aldrich bill would work mainly to the benefit of Wall street gamblers. It proposes that national banks may deposit certain securities with the Treasury and issue in bank notes 75 per cent of the market value of the collateral, in total amount up to $250,000,000, on payment of a monthly tax of one-half of 1 per cent.

No commercial bank which discounts the notes of merchants and manufacturers, and whose collateral is bills of lading of goods in transit and storage receipts for cotton, wheat, butter, and other commodities, can avail itself of this provision. Only Wall street call loans will be furthered.

Under this plan Edward H. Harriman, who tried to unload Chicago and Alton bonds on the savings banks of this State, could find a depository for them in the Treasury. Wall street promoters need only print bonds, lobby at Albany to get them on the list of securities permitted to savings banks, make a "market price" by wash sales, secure permission to deposit them in Washington, and issue in "money" 75 per cent of their artificial value. What a relief to gamblers who have paid as high as 200 per cent interest to issue their own money for one-half of 1 per cent a month!

Senator CULBERSON proposes exactly what The World on Tuesday recommended: That banks shall keep their legal reserves in their own vaults and shall not call a Wall street credit cash. The 6,000 small national banks may now deposit three-fifths of their cash reserve in Wall street banks. The use of this outside money for stock gambling brought about the crash in October. In November thousands of these small banks had to suspend paying their depositors' checks in money because the Wall street banks refused to cash New York drafts.

This provision of Senator CULBERSON'S bill which requires the banks in thousands of small towns to keep their money at home, out of the hands of the Wall street gamblers, would prevent or lessen such disaster to local trade and industry as resulted from the October collapse.

To meet the annual fall demand for money to move the crops, Senator CULBERSON proposes in a second bill to use the Government deposits, over $200,000,000 of which are now in national banks paying no interest. In April, May, June, and July these deposits would be charged 6 per cent interest; and depository banks would usually return the money to the Treasury. In August, September, October, and November the interest would be reduced to 2 per cent, and banks which desired money for moving crops would again apply for deposits. During December, January, February, and March the rate would be 4 per cent. This would give an elastic currency about equal for the present to that proposed by Senator ALDRICH.

Under Mr. ALDRICH'S scheme the elasticity would benefit the Wall street gamblers. Under Mr. CULBERSON'S the benefit would go to agricultural and manufacturing sections.

How devoid Mr. ALDRICH'S bill is of benefit to legitimate industry the comparison of the rate of interest with the usury laws of the States conclusively shows. By special legislation stock exchange call loans are outside the usury law.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, interrupting the reading). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I yield to the gentleman ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, Mr. Chairman, I had two hours.

Mr. BURLESON. I thank the gentleman from Kentucky, but that is of no importance now; the gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded to me.

Mr. SHERLEY. But I desire that the matter of time shall be rightfully understood. There were four hours of general debate, two on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky used within twenty minutes of one hour and he has yielded twenty minutes. There is no provision in the rule that the time is to be divided or controlled by any one. It says that there shall be four hours of general debate.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the time be divided equally between the gentleman from Pennsylvania and myself.

Mr. PAYNE. Before that question is put I would like to know how much longer the gentleman from Texas wants to talk about something else besides the bill under consideration.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, a few minutes longer; only long enough to direct through these editorials attention to the character of measures proposed, so as to enlist the interest of the Republican party in these measures now before the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Texas knows that what he is saying is not germane to the bill, and under the rules of the House he is out of order. He is now asking for unanimous consent, and I ask him to put some limit to the time that he will use.

Mr. BURLESON. I am not asking for unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has very courteously yielded to me, as has also the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it was understood—and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] will bear me out—that there should be four hours of debate, and it was so agreed by the Committee on Rules when the rule was brought in that it should be equally divided between the two sides. I now renew my request to carry out that understanding.

Mr. PAYNE. Unless I have an understanding from the gentleman from Texas I shall have to object.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from New York desires to disregard the solemn agreement of the Committee on Rules, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York has no delicacy about that. No two Members of the House can bind the House. The gentleman from Kentucky talks about "standing by the solemn agreement of the House." I do not intend to be bound by any such agreement.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I feel sure that what I am saying is of interest to the whole country, especially to patriotic Republicans, and I do think that the gentleman from New York ought not to interpose objections.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman will confine himself to some reasonable limit, I shall object—say half an hour.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not expect to occupy but a few minutes more, if that will be any satisfaction to the gentleman. I want to have one more editorial read.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman confine himself to half an hour? I have no objection to that, but I want to get on with this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. A half hour—that is just about five times as much time as I want.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well, then. I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman have half an hour, to be taken out of the time of general debate.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to renew my request, if it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the remaining two hours of time for general debate be divided equally between the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I object to that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say respecting that, that when I was spoken to about it that was the understanding between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and myself. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] came to me and asked me what my understanding was respecting the division of time. I told him I expected one-half would be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and one-half by myself. There was no permission asked of the House for that division of time, but that was my understanding.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I am to be directly affected by this objection, I would like to have a word to say. In anticipation that some of the leaders of the Republican party might not be exactly pleased with what I intended to put into the RECORD——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BURLESON. I spoke to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], who has charge of this bill, asking the gentleman if there would be any objection to me occupying five, ten, or perhaps fifteen minutes, and he replied, "None whatever." But for that assurance I would not have attempted to bring these matters to the attention of the committee.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word, so that there will be no misunderstanding about this. So far as the time is concerned, I think, of course, that it is perfectly fair that it should be divided between the two gentlemen, but the Committee on Rules did not pass on that question at all. The rule provides for four hours of general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has that rule before him.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman clearly understood, however, that it was to be divided equally, according to the custom of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. I presumed it would be. The House generally does that. What I want to get rid of is the idea that the Comimttee on Rules gave any assurance to anybody that it would be so divided.

Mr. SHERLEY. No further assurance than the fact that the four hours was the time fixed in the rule, and that was evidence of the fact that in accordance with the custom of the House it would be equally divided.

Mr. DALZELL. We so assumed, but we did not undertake to bind the House.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, there is no difficulty about this. Gentlemen come in here and seek to control half the time on each side, knowing that the rules of the House allow them only an hour. Of course it is competent for the chairman of the committee to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr.

BURLESON] if he chooses to do so for an hour. It is not competent for the gentleman from Texas to go on with his discourse without the unanimous consent of the committee, because it is clearly out of order under the rules. There is no difficulty about that. This attempt of gentlemen to come in here because they happen to be in charge of the bill and control the House about the time of debate is something unusual and has not been heard of until recently, and never can be done unless the House agrees to it by unanimous consent, and nobody knows that better than the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand any such fact. I understand the rule fixed four hours for general debate, and I know, as the gentleman will agree with me, that it has been the immemorial custom of this House to divide the time for general debate between the two sides.

Mr. PAYNE. That is done by unanimous consent. I want to cite the gentleman to something very recent, so that he will remember it. He will recall that, upon the debate upon the President's message, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] wanted to control half the time, and he was allowed only one hour and nothing more.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know if the time of this discussion is being taken out of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman from Texas hasn't got any time.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] has yielded me time.

Mr. PAYNE. But the gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, is there no way of determining whether the time can be equally divided? And I want to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] why he allowed the gentleman from Kentucky to dispense with one hour of time without objection, and then the Chair to notify him that his time was out? How did the Chair know that the gentleman from Kentucky had only one hour? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, read the rule.

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] had control of half of the time for the Democratic side.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules, as the Chair understands it, any gentleman recognized by the Chair has an hour. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], reserving the balance of his time, yielded two other gentlemen ten minutes each. The Chair has ruled that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky, under the rules, has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Chair now hold that the other three hours——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would now naturally recognize a gentleman on the majority side for an hour, and preferably a member of the committee, but if neither a Member on the majority side nor a member of the committee desires to take the floor——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not proper under the rules of the House in general debate in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union that a Member may address himself to other subjects than those in reference to the bill being discussed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say yes, if he is recognized and has time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Then if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] is recognized and is yielded time by a gentleman who is recognized, it would be in accordance with the rule for him to discuss subjects not pertaining to the bill in general debate?

The CHAIRMAN. That condition does not exist at the present time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I made that in reply to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], that the gentleman's remarks in reference to the banking and currency question were out of order in general debate on this bill, and I merely wanted to inquire of the Chair whether or not the discussion of the bill being considered by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was not proper discussion? I understood the Chair to say that it was. Did I understand the Chair to answer my inquiry?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I am the ranking minority Member upon this committee. I now ask recognition as such.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will grant the gentleman recognition if no member of the majority side of the committee desires recognition at this time. As no one has asked for recognition, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON].

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. PAYNE. Now the gentleman can proceed in order.

Mr. BURLESON. Having been fortified with recognition by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON], I presume with the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I can now proceed.

Mr. PAYNE. "The gentleman from New York" is desirous of having the gentleman from Texas proceed with whatever he has to say.

Mr. BURLESON. I will ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the article.

The Clerk read as follows:

If the United States charged 6 per cent interest, how could commercial banks pay it and loan the money at 6 per cent to business customers? Yet 6 per cent is the legal interest on commercial loans in New York, Connecticut, Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, and West Virginia.

Senator Aldrich's bill should be entitled "An act to facilitate stock gambling." What the banks of the United States need is not more money, but more honesty and no gambling.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, that is an expression from one of the leading papers of the country, and, as I have stated, formerly a Democratic paper. I now——

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BURLESON. In one minute. I now send to the desk and ask to be read another editorial, and I feel sure that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] would not interpose any objection if he had known I was going to maintain the equilibrium by having also read an editorial from the leading paper of Pennsylvania, formerly a Republican paper, but now an independent journal.

I ask that the Clerk will now read.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question first?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice the gentleman said that the New York World had formerly been a Democratic paper, but now was an independent paper.

Mr. BURLESON. That is my understanding, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman if he read out of the Democratic party all papers and all former Democrats who have a sneaking notion that there may be more than one man in the Democratic party of sufficient character and ability to be a candidate for the Presidency at the next election?

Mr. BURLESON. Not by any means. On the contrary, it does not rest with me to read papers, daily or weekly, out of the Democratic party. No Democrat assumes such authority, but, on the contrary, as I understand it, there has been a disposition manifested by the old-time leaders of the Republican party, not only to read out of the Republican party papers that have approved the policies now advocated by the Republican President in the White House, but they have manifested a purpose in their next convention to read those Republicans out of the party who persist in approving these Democratic policies which Theodore Roosevelt has been advocating for more than two or three years. [Applause on Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. To go back to the New York World, is not its leading offense in the mind of the gentleman that it proclaims daily and boldly that there are other gentlemen in the Democratic party than the one "peerless leader" who is competent and able and fit to be nominated by that party for the Presidency?

Mr. BURLESON. If it does do that, it states a fact as far as that is concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. But why should the gentleman read it out of his party?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not attempting to read it out of my party. I have simply announced what I understand to be the policy of all self-respecting metropolitan journals, that they now maintain an attitude of independence, and it is only the thick-and-thin organs of the Republican party which now openly confess that they are partisan journals.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Texas has placed me in a position in which I did not place myself.

Mr. BURLESON. Well, I assure the gentleman I did not intend to do so.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to state to the gentleman that I make no objection to the gentleman from Texas occupying time. I simply rose to correct matters of misapprehension as to what was the action of the Committee on Rules. It was asserted that the Committee on Rules had agreed that the time should be equally divided.

Mr. BURLESON. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DALZELL. I simply denied that, because the Committee on Rules did not undertake to fix that at all, but left it to the House.

Mr. BURLESON. I beg the gentleman's pardon for my mistake. I thought he was doing as he usually does, cooperating with the majority leader in what he was attempting to do.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, if the gentleman——

Mr. BURLESON. I decline to yield for the present, until I have the other editorial read.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman thinks that in accordance with his usual courtesy——

Mr. BURLESON. I ask the Clerk to now read from the Philadelphia North American.

The Clerk read as follows:

[The North American, Philadelphia, Thursday, January 8, 1908.]

REAL AND WRONG REMEDIES.

The difference between the three financial measures proposed by Senator CULBERSON, of Texas, and the currency bill of Senator ALDRICH is the difference between patriotism and Government patronage of a favored class in a favored community.

ALDRICH plans an issue of circulating notes by the Treasury to the banks, to be based on State, municipal, county, and railroad bonds. These notes, bearing the Government guaranty of redemption as lawful money, are to be taxed 6 per cent.

This provision, professedly, is to restrict the $250,000,000 issue to emergencies and force the natural retirement of the notes when the period of stringency passes.

In reality the purpose is to limit the inflation to the banks able to obtain a rate well above 6 per cent for their currency. In other words, to banks that cater to stock gamblers and not to business men, who, even in States where usury laws do not forbid loans above a specified interest figure, as they do in Pennsylvania, can not afford the call-loan rates habitual among the gamblers of Wall street.

So much for ALDRICH. What CULBERSON proposes is that banks shall be required to keep in their own vaults their legal reserves for the commercial uses of their own communities; that interest shall be charged for Government deposits at moderate rates, varying according to the seasons of demand for currency to move the crops; that there shall be inaugurated a system of insurance of deposits by the associated banks of the country, operating in conjunction with the Comptroller of the Currency, so that not a dollar's loss can come to anyone, but that confidence will be so strengthened that hoarding would not follow any sudden scare.

The best proof, in our opinion, that Senator CULBERSON has spoken the sentiment of the country while Senator ALDRICH was expressing the will of Wall street, lies in the conservatism of the Culberson bills and the remarkable fact that they conflict in no way with the proposed Aldrich law.

The mood of the nation is one of sober, temperate thought. There is no spirit of rancor or destructiveness or opposition to capital or the banking interests in any quarter. A nation of business men desires an installation of business methods. That is the whole story.

The aim of everyone is to prevent a recurrence of panic and dearth of currency. ALDRICH takes the Wall street view point and offers a scheme that will do nothing but enlarge the banking power without return to any of the legitimate business needs of the country.

CULBERSON presents bills built upon the lines of prevention of the sacrifice of industrial and commercial interests for the benefit of the stock gamblers of New York. They do not restrict in any way the banks from profitable use of their assets for proper purposes or limit the legitimate freedom to promote every form of business that makes for the well-being of the people of the country.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, these expressions of two leading newspapers of our country I commend to the careful consideration of the majority Members of this House. Already much dissatisfaction has manifested itself at the other end of this Capitol to the provisions of the Aldrich bill, as evidenced this morning in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by numerous amendments offered thereto by Republican Senators.

And, gentlemen of the majority party, permit me to remind you that you are still more directly responsible to the people. You are the direct representatives of the people, and will be amenable to the people for your action upon these measures in the fall election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You will believe me when I assure you that I feel the deepest concern about the welfare of my friends upon the other side. I do not want to see you do yourselves hurt; scrutinize well this Aldrich bill, and I feel confident there will be found still more dissatisfaction upon the Republican side of the Chamber at this end of the Capitol with the Aldrich bill than has manifested itself at the other end, not because you are directly responsible to the people and they will get a lick at you in November, but, of course, because you are better posted upon these financial questions. [Applause.]

Mr. MACON. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to explain why I voted against every proposition in connection with H. R. 7618, being a bill asking for the right to construct a dam across a certain stream, which was before the House this morning.

I opposed it because a certain construction of that bill seems to encroach upon States rights.

This bill was referred to this morning as the "dam bill."

I merely want to go on record as opposing this "dam bill" or any other bill that encroaches upon States rights. [Applause.]

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, during the Fifty-ninth Congress, when the arrangement was made and the rule passed in this House authorizing a joint committee for the purpose of considering the work of the Commission on the Revision of the Laws during the recess I, being the ranking Democrat upon that committee, found that it was impossible for me to come back to Washington during the vacation and I yielded my place on the committee to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. For that reason I now yield forty-five minutes, the balance of my time remaining, to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not desire to use any of the time kindly yielded back to me by the gentleman from Arkansas, and unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to use more time, I think we might proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I move that we proceed to the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Every citizen of the United States, whether actually resident or abiding within the same, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or in any foreign country, without the permission or authority of the Government, directly or indirectly, commences or carries on any verbal or written correspondence or intercourse with any foreign government or any officer or agent thereof, with an intent to influence the measures or conduct of any foreign government or of any officer or agent thereof, in relation to any disputes or controversies with the United States, or to defeat the measures of the Government of the United States; and every person, being a citizen of or resident within the United States or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and not duly authorized, counsels, advises, or assists in any such correspondence with such intent, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than three years; but nothing in this section shall be construed to abridge the right of a citizen to apply, himself or his agent, to any foreign government or the agents thereof for redress of any injury which he may have sustained from such government or any of its agents or subjects.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of making an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of this committee. I notice that the committee have added to section 5 and to other sections that follow, in italics, the words, "or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

I make this inquiry because these words appear all the way through this bill, in a number of places. I understand that this committee in defining the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and in defining crimes, have added to various sections of the law as it now stands upon the statute books, these words, "or in any place subject to the jurisdiction thereof."

Will the gentleman inform me or, rather, inform the committee what places that would embrace? The thing that troubles me is this: There are various places in the United States, for instance, places that are ceded to the United States by the States for the erection of public buildings, for the erection of forts, for the erection of arsenals, for the establishment of soldiers' homes and other places. Now, under Article I, paragraph 4, section 17 of the Constitution, provision is made that the United States shall have "exclusive jurisdiction" over certain places, docks, forts, arsenals, and such other places, the jurisdiction of which may be ceded by the States for the erection of necessary buildings. Now, I understand that this provision of the bill is for the purpose of covering places of that character. Is that true?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; not this provision here. That is put in with the intention of covering Porto Rico, the Philippines, and places that have since been acquired. The language of existing law would not include them. Now, this topic is criminal correspondence with a foreign government, and we do not think a man ought to be enabled to escape punishment if the criminal correspondence is carried on from Porto Rico or the Philippines.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not think so, and I did not make the inquiry because I thought anybody ought to escape punishment, but if a man engages in any of these offenses denounced by this chapter 1 in a place over which the United States have jurisdiction, you do not mean to include forts, arsenals, and places like that mentioned in paragraph 17 of section 2 of the Constitution.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; we do not have reference to that. That comes in a later provision, where we define that. This was simply to extend the protection of the Government to the punishment of crimes against its own existence to all places subject to its jurisdiction.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is not a fort or an arsenal or a place of that sort subject to its jurisdiction?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. This did not require to include that. That was already included in the general provision. We included that language particularly to embrace the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Then I will make my inquiry later, when we reach the other provision.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes. The gentleman will find that the language varies, and at times it is made to exclude certain things.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The reason I made the inquiry is that the Constitution, in the section I have referred to, uses the words "exclusive jurisdiction," and the words to which I refer do not—simply use the words "subject to the jurisdiction," etc.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is not intended to refer to those sections, or to that kind of an offense.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Is not the real reason why you use that language in that section the fact that Porto Rico and Guam and the Philippines occupy such an anomalous position with reference to the United States that nobody can define it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We felt in a general way that they were subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and that there ought to be protection against conspiracies there against the existence of the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Subject to its jurisdiction in such a general way that you did not want to undertake the hazard of defining the relation that does exist. Is not that the fact?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That was not within the province of the committee at all.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. If two or more persons in any State or Territory, or in any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, conspire to overthrow, put down, or to destroy by force the Government of the United States, or to levy war against them, or to oppose by force the authority thereof, or by force to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States, or by force to seize, take, or possess any property of the United States contrary to the authority thereof, they shall each be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making some observations respecting the policy of fixing a maximum penalty only for the various offenses defined in the bill. Under existing law, upon the subject contained in the section just read, there is a minimum as well as a maximum penalty. I understand the wisdom of the policy that vests in a court a large discretion in imposing penalties where convictions are had, but there are many offenses where criminal intent is a necessary ingredient and where I believe the safety of the public requires a minimum as well as a maximum penalty. I have run through this bill, and I think in almost every instance the maximum penalty only is prescribed. The penalty imposed will depend very much on the ideals and temper of the judge who is to determine it. A man in one jurisdiction may be fined a nominal sum and imprisoned for a nominal period for an offense, and one convicted in another jurisdiction of exactly the same offense may be fined a substantial amount or incarcerated for a considerable period. That, of course, in some measure may occur even though a minimum penalty was fixed, but I think there are offenses in which, as I said, the criminal intent is an ingredient, where the question ought not to be left entirely to the discretion of the court. Sometimes a court may abuse that discretion.

I remember not many months ago a case which, I think, occurred in the Federal court in the State of Nebraska, where a citizen of that State was convicted of fraud against the land laws of the country. My recollection is that the court simply imprisoned the defendant for a couple of hours, and permitted him to remain in the custody of the sheriff in the court room during that time. That judgment was criticized throughout the length and breadth of the land. The court doubtless had its own reason for rendering practically nugatory the verdict or conviction in the case.

Now, I want to call the attention of the committee to the question as to whether or not in many of these offenses, at least, there ought not to be a minimum penalty as well as a maximum. I notice in the section under consideration the existing law is changed by striking out the minimum penalty and the sentence or the judgment of the court may be practically nominal in the way of fine or imprisonment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Let me inquire of the gentleman whether or not the committee have not adopted a uniform policy in that respect? I think they have.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I have so stated.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I notice in one section where in an assault with an attempt to commit rape the penalty may be only a dollar. It seems to me in an offense of that gravity there ought to be a minimum penalty. I am submitting these views to the committee for its consideration as the sections are being read. The particular section under consideration I do not consider of so much importance except that it involves the policy of the entire new code—that of fixing a maximum penalty only. I suppose in a capital offense the committee fixes an absolute penalty with a minimum penalty. I hope, at least, they have. I have not examined it, but I hope in a capital offense the penalty is not absolutely and altogether at the discretion of the court. I allude to what we call capital offenses. I now withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, or if two or more persons go in disguise on the highway, or on the premises of another, with intent to prevent or hinder his free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege so secured, they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years; and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I understand that this section is a codification of section 5519 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is not. It is the exact language of section 5508 of the Statutes. It does not relate to what the gentleman has in mind. It is a different section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The section the gentleman from Georgia has in mind has been held unconstitutional. This section has been sustained repeatedly, and I want to offer an amendment which will enlarge or increase its application.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I know it has and have the case before me. This is a part of the act of 1872.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; but the gentleman will find that section 5508 was upheld in at least a dozen different cases.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does the gentleman recall the Cruikshank case and the Reeves case? In both of those cases the convictions were not sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand they were reversed, but the gentleman will find that in the Cruikshank case and in the case of ex parte Yarboro the Supreme Court upheld section 5508. I am somewhat familiar with that section, because I argued the matter in the Supreme Court, and I know the section is constitutional.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. If it is a compilation of section 5519, it is not.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is word for word section 5508 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have no doubt the gentleman is correct and I merely rose for the purpose of making inquiry, knowing that the sections were not identical, but if this was a codification of section 5519 it would not be proper to incorporate a section which had been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

Mr. SHERLEY. We have not, and if the gentleman will get the copy of the bill—if he has not it before him——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have it here.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, if he will get the second part of the report, instead of the bill, he will then find the bill printed on one page and the existing law on the opposite page, and he can at a glance see that this section is merely a reenactment of section 5508.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I might say, further, that the gentleman will find by reference to the report on the last page that section 5519 is omitted and thrown out as unconstitutional.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Well, I had not had the opportunity to investigate it that far. I desire to say that I had not had opportunity to give this matter the thorough investigation that I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] have, and being familiar with some of these cases and familiar with those he has referred to I was of the opinion, as I have already stated, that this was a codification of section 5519. I may have no motion to make with reference to it. I was in hopes that this section would go out, being the result of legislation passed in 1872. However, if this committee has seen fit to let it remain, and believing that a motion to strike it out might be futile, I may not make the motion. I do not think under the decisions that have been made that this law ought to now remain on the statute books.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion, it is true that this section was originally passed as a part of the civil-rights act, and had in view simply dealing with situations then supposed to exist in the South.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is also true that since then the section has been used for many many other matters and is now of great importance, not because of the original purpose of the act, the cause for which has long passed away, but because it enables the Federal Government to protect citizens in their rights other than those relating to the franchise.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand that, and I have had experience as a lawyer in cases where it has been used for other purpose than to protect the citizen in his right of the franchise. I can recall one case that I might call to the attention of this committee, where the parties were convicted at a time when there was not the right to appeal, parties convicted under this section, and one of them was pardoned by President McKinley on the recommendation of Attorney-General Griggs, because he had not been properly tried, and because the evidence did not justify his conviction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to continue for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to speak for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have seen it used for different purposes than that for which it was intended; and it is because of the experience I have had as a lawyer in seeing it used for purposes for which it was not intended it should be used that I proposed to make the motion to strike it out. I do not desire to do anything in reference to this bill that will not meet the approval of my friend from Kentucky, because he has given the matter much more careful attention than I have or than I could, as I am not on the committee which reported this bill. Still I do not desire to let this section pass without saying that, for one, knowing the injustice and the wrongs that have been perpetrated under the use of it, I at least protest against its remaining longer upon the statute books. It has served all the purposes it was intended to serve and is seldom used now, except to harass and annoy the citizen, and to drag into the United States courts citizens who should be tried in the State courts.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "citizen," in the second line of section 19, the words "or person."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 5, after the word "citizen," insert "or person."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have just a word to say in relation to that, Mr. Chairman. We have before the Committee on the Judiciary a bill, introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], who is now in charge of this bill on one side of the House, practically covering this amendment. As the law stands to-day under this statute, a citizen of the United States gets the protection of its provisions, but the alien who may be domiciled therein and living here, receiving the protection of all other laws, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States does not get the protection of this statute. And already the failure of this legislation to apply so as to protect foreign people who are living here and who are domiciled here has given rise to very grave and very embarrassing international complications. It has tended to a very large extent to embarrass the Federal Government. There is no reason why an alien living in this country and behaving himself and obeying the law should not receive the protection of all of the criminal statutes the same as any citizen does. As I say, the courts have held in at least one important case that this section does not apply to and give protection to an alien.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that during the administration of President Harrison he called the attention of Congress to the lack of protection of aliens in the penal laws of the United States, and requested some legislation along that line? Many aliens are here under provisions of treaties.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. And we are bound by the custom——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. By international law——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. By international law to afford them a certain amount of protection, and when the Federal statutes are examined it is discovered that there is almost a total absence of safeguards for the protection of aliens who are rightfully and properly here, and I am in thorough sympathy with the gentleman's amendment. I think other legislation along that line ought to be enacted, of a broader nature, in order that we may more fully perform our international obligations in pursuance of treaty arrangements.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I agree entirely with the suggestions of the gentleman from Indiana, but while this general code is going through there is no reason why aliens should not receive the benefit of all these provisions.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As it is now, would it include children and women?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It would if they were citizens, not if they were aliens. It includes citizens, no matter what their sex or age. But it does not include aliens.

Mr. WEBB. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think it wise, in order to perfect his idea, to insert after the word "laws," in the last line, the words "or treaties."

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have discussed this somewhat with the gentlemen on the committee, and this section has received on repeated occasions a construction by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the committee—I do not know that I have a right to state the position—did not feel justified in making any profound changes in the structural character of the section, as they did not know what the result might be so far as the decisions of the court in the future are concerned.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, in further answer to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], the Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the word "laws" included "treaties."

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman think they would do so under this section?

Mr. SHERLEY. Unquestionably. And I will in my own time read the gentleman a decision of the Supreme Court directly bearing upon this, in relation to the violation of treaty rights.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that that would be so held when you came to put in a new class of citizenship—aliens, for instance.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. You do not put in a new class of citizens. It does extend to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. WEBB. And those persons you have mentioned have not the same rights under the Constitution and laws that the citizen has?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The court has held that under the language of this specific section the alien is not entitled to the protection given to the citizen.

Mr. WEBB. I understand that. Does the gentleman think the words "constitutional laws" would include treaties we make with foreign countries?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]——

Mr. WEBB. I mean in this section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. On the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say very frankly that I have not myself examined that with care, but I would not hesitate to take the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky. I know him to be a very able lawyer. But I have not personally examined that with care, so I would not like to give an opinion upon it. But with his opinion I am willing to rest, so far as I am concerned, on that particular section.

Mr. WEBB. I believe I am satisfied if he is.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, the bill which we now have under consideration is not a bill providing new law, but the codification and revision of all the laws already in existence. If the Committee on the Judiciary already has a bill providing for an amendment to be made in such form as to cover the idea incorporated in the remarks of the gentlemen who have just preceded me, it is very well for that amendment to be made by that committee after due deliberation and careful consideration. If we are now to enact new laws and make interlineations, we will be interminable in the consideration of the bill before the House. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that so far as practicable we confine ourselves to the question which is immediately before us—that is, the revision and the codification of the laws already extant.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether the original section should be extended by the incorporation of the words suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. I doubt very much whether this section ought to remain in our code of laws. We all understand how it came into the law, and the purpose it was intended to serve, and we all understand something of the evils that followed its enactment. I know that there may be cases where this might be a beneficial enactment, but the danger that it will be abused and that far more harm will be done by its existence than could result on account of its absence persuades me that the provision itself ought to go out of the code. The penalty imposed is very severe, the offense very poorly and very vaguely defined. Nobody can tell how serious the interference may be with the rights of particular citizens or persons denounced under this statute. It is possible for any grand jury or any prosecuting officer under this provision to formulate a charge against anybody for almost anything.

Now, the provision might not be abused, perhaps, for a considerable length of time, and in some sections of the country perhaps it will not be, but there may come a time, soon or late; there may appear somewhere a condition out of which will come great abuses from such provisions as this. Abuses may come from political prejudice, may come from labor disturbances, may come out of anything which causes prejudice to prevail, causes one class of people to be arrayed against another, may come from very little cause, or practically without cause. At such times, times favorable for the abuse of this power, it is only necessary for somebody to have the will to institute a prosecution against almost anybody for almost anything.

When you extend the provision beyond its present limits, embracing citizens of our country for their protection, and take in all who may be here though not citizens, not merely sojourners, but those who come here and remain a long time, enjoying nearly all the advantages of the citizen and escaping much of the burdens of citizenship, you go far indeed. My own judgment is that instead of amending the provision it ought to be entirely eliminated.

I believe it is a good thing not to have too much criminal law, not to have too many provisions aimed at the citizen, not to make dragnets that may be used here and there and everywhere. It is a serious thing to be charged with an offense of this strange, marvelous, far-spreading character. It means that a man may be caused to expend a large amount of money in his defense, although he has been guilty of no offense, and be put to a great deal of inconvenience and may suffer a great deal of hardship from vague charges of shadowy, imaginary wrongdoing. It is one of those provisions of law that may be used by the powerful to oppress the weak; that may be used by the vicious for the undoing of those who are not intentionally bad and who do not really inflict any injury upon anybody. I believe the law would be better if the committee were to strike out the section, and I shall, after this amendment is voted upon, move to strike it out.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I just want to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that the statute as it stands to-day, and the persons against whom it is aimed, against whom it pronounces penalties, are not confined to citizens. The statute covers persons, everybody, aliens and citizens alike. It only fails to protect aliens. It prohibits everybody from committing the offense, but only protects the citizen. So that the people against whom it applies include all persons, but it fails to give to aliens the protection that it gives to citizens.

Mr. SHERLEY. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine is in exact accordance with a bill introduced by myself and now pending before the Judiciary Committee. For the reason so well stated by the gentleman from Louisiana I did not undertake to have it embodied in the report of this Commission. Being a member of that committee, I did not want any desire of mine for new legislation to result in a departure by the committee from its rule of holding fast to existing law; so that I did not in committee and shall not now urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine. But with the indulgence of the House I shall state the reasons for the bill, as the matter has come up, and shall then briefly reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri as to the need of repealing the section as it now stands.

In the case of Baldwin v. Frank, in 120 United States, a case came before the Supreme Court by certification from the circuit court as to certain questions involved in the construction of this section 5508. There had been a writ of habeas corpus sued out by the plaintiff asking to be dismissed from the custody of the marshal of the Federal court, on the ground that the section under which he was held was not applicable to the facts stated against him.

Those facts were that Baldwin was held in custody by the marshal under a warrant issued by the commissioner of the circuit court on a charge of conspiracy with others to deprive Sing Lee and others, Chinese aliens, of the equal protection of the laws and of equal privileges and immunities under the laws. When the case came before the Supreme Court, that court expressly held that Congress would have the power to provide for the punishment of offenses against aliens, but that Congress had not so provided, and that the word "citizen" in section 5508 was used in the special sense of "citizen of the United States," and that therefore there was no statute law to punish conspiracy against an alien. Now, the need of such a law is, to my mind, very great, for I rest the whole case upon this fundamental proposition, that where there is responsibility there ought to be power. Let a situation arise to-morrow in which a subject of a foreign country is injured in America by the citizen of some particular State, and that foreign country looks not to that particular State, but to the United States of America, for redress, and the United States can not answer with any degree of credit by saying, "We are sorry this happened, but we have no control over these matters. You will have to see the State of Kentucky," or the State of Louisiana, or Missouri, or California, as the case may be.

Now, this is not merely prophecy; it is history. That is actually what did occur when we had the trouble in Louisiana, growing out of the Mafia, when citizens there committed acts of violence against citizens of Italy. Italy brought a claim against the United States; and although the United States answered, saying, "We have no power to punish these people," yet the United States Government did pay a money indemnity to the families of the men who were killed.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. For a question.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Is it not true that the United States Government is compelled to answer that it has no power to punish offenses committed in a State, because the Congress of the United States has no right to enact a law making it a crime for a citizen in a State to assault an alien, any more than it has a right to make it a crime to assault a citizen?

Mr. SHERLEY. No, sir; and I do not base that answer on my own opinion. I base it on the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Baldwin v. Frank, 120 United States, and the gentleman is too good a lawyer to read that case and then put his question again to me.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have read that case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that I may continue for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that he may continue for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. I do not mean to contend that the National Government can take jurisdiction of all sorts of offenses committed in the States. Gentlemen who know my position know that I have argued against any such construction. Last session I took occasion to define the limitation under the treaty-making power. But it is manifest that to the extent that we can confer rights upon an alien under a treaty we can protect the alien in those rights and punish violations of them; and we not only can, but we ought to, or we will again find this country in a position of humiliation by virtue of the lack of law on the statute books enabling the National Government to uphold its obligations to a foreign country. For that reason I introduced a bill and shall press it before the Committee on the Judiciary. It is a bill that has been requested by several different Presidents of the United States, and the conditions that have recently occurred in this country are sufficient to show the gravity of the situation and the danger of a condition arising when the National Government will be unable to punish those citizens who violate the rights of aliens.

Now, the committee will notice that the wording of that act does not in any way undertake to define what rights can be conferred upon aliens. I should not undertake such a task. The act provides that "if two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any person in the free exercise of a right guaranteed him by the Constitution and laws of the United States, they shall be punished," etc. It does not apply to wrongful acts of an individual, because they would generally be too insignificant and unimportant for the National Government to take cognizance of; but if two or more persons conspire to threaten or intimidate an alien in the rights guaranteed by the Constitution and the laws of the United States, they shall be punished; and they ought to be punished by the power that guarantees the right.

Now, in answer to the remarks by the gentleman from Missouri in regard to the repeal of the whole section I wish to say that I certainly have no love for a general dragnet criminal law. There are many proper criticisms such as those made by the distinguished gentleman to this section, and its early history and some of the abuses growing out of an attempt to make it apply to situations existing in the Southland would in no sense make me a special lover or advocate of this particular law; but if the gentleman will take the decisions in recent years, he will find that this section has served a very great purpose, in cases not relating to the elective franchise, but in cases involving homestead rights, and in other cases relating to matters altogether foreign to the original purpose of the act; and the committee did not feel that it had the right to suggest the repeal of a law of as wide applicability and established constitutionality as this law. There are at least twenty cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States dealing directly with that section. There have been many persons punished under it, and it is to-day a great safeguard. If it should be repealed, we would have to immediately enact many special sections to cover the gap that would be made in the law by its repeal. It may be suggested that we ought to go into a detailed enactment of specific offenses, and generally speaking that is true; a citizen ought to know directly what he is charged with, what is his offense. But, after all, the ingenuity of man can not make such specific provisions as to cover all cases, and it is proper that we should have a general law, hedged around as this is by certain provisions, that will cover cases of magnitude that are overlooked. There must be proof of a conspiracy; there must be a conspiracy to intimidate, etc., and in my judgment these words should be so construed as to relate to physical violence against the individual, and not simply to injury in the way of interference. With these restrictions upon it the statute is not as dangerous as stated. Then, after all, if you are going to repeal statutes on the basis that they may be used for oppression, we will have nothing left on the statute book.

The whole theory of government rests, and must rest, in a belief in the integrity of your courts and in the integrity of your juries. Without that belief we are not justified in legislating anything. With that belief we are justified in keeping this section upon the statute books. I shall not urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD]. I think, perhaps, it would be better that that sort of amendments creating new laws should not come into this bill, but I shall strongly urge the committee to retain the section.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I see that all through these laws, so far as we have got, they define in a general way the punishment. They shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years, and so on. What I want to ask is this: In that case the punishment could run down to, say, an hour in prison or a fine of $1. Does it mean imprisonment in the penitentiary in these statutes or imprisonment in the jail? Then I want to couple with that another question. If it is imprisonment in jail, it is not a felony. If it is imprisonment in the penitentiary, it is a felony.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, we have a provision in the bill which provides that where the punishment may be imprisonment for a longer period than a year it shall be a felony, and in other cases it shall be simply a misdemeanor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, that is a general provision, then?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Now, in regard to the gentleman's inquiry as to minimum punishments, it is in line with suggestions earlier made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. It was urged by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] that it was unwise in certain cases to dispense with minimum punishments because there might be a failure of justice, as occurred in the Nebraska case, when a judge imposed a trifling fine and imprisonment of a few hours for a very grave offense. The answer to that is this: That while that is a danger, yet, on the other hand, there is no character of offense that may not present a case where a man is technically guilty and yet where his moral guilt is very slight. If you have a minimum punishment of any size, two things are liable to result, either a failure on the part of the jury to convict because they believe the minimum punishment carries a greater punishment than the offense warrants or a conviction and a punishment beyond the crime.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Kentucky about the minimum punishment rather than with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER]. I think the discretion ought to be very large. I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky another question. There are two penalties provided in this section for the same crime. One of them is that those convicted shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years, and the second one is, and it is not alternate, "and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States." The question I want to ask is this: Is not that second punishment entirely out of all proportion to any crime that a man is liable to commit under this section?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think that it is frequently out of all proportion to the crime punished under the section. It is not always so. There can be offenses under this section of the highest gravity. If the gentelman will bear with me, the reason that was put in——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to have only five minutes more. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SHERLEY. The reason that provision was put into the general law—and the gentleman will notice we are simply enacting the existing law—was because the section as originally drawn looked particularly to a certain class of offenses, and those were offenses against the freedmen. They were attempts under this act to punish what were alleged as wrongs by the Southern States against the rights of the negro. As the result of that, there was put there the added penalty that a man should forfeit his right to hold office. For my part, I should be very glad to see that latter punishment abolished, certainly to see it put in so as to leave it discretionary with the court, because it is true that there may be punishment under this section now for an offense not of sufficient magnitude to carry with it disfranchisement.

The committee did not feel, however, that in dealing with a section of this kind, with the amount of controversy that had raged around it and around the subject that it was meant to deal with, that they could wisely afford to amend it, and we brought it in exactly as it is for the consideration of this committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not criticise the position of the committee. I would like to have five minutes of my own, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has three minutes left of the time which is already granted him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That will be plenty. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, when the committee disposes of the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], and if it votes down the amendment that my colleague from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] indicated he would offer—to strike it all out—I intend to offer an amendment to strike out all after the word "years," in line 13. I am in favor of striking that whole section out, but if I can not get that out I am especially in favor of striking that part of it out which provides the second penalty. As to this section, it is difficult to understand exactly what is intended, unless we go back and look at it in the light of the circumstances, as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] suggests, thirty-five years ago; but this second penalty, of which I am complaining, is a severer penalty than generally attaches to felonies committed in this country. For instance, in Missouri, and I suppose it is the same in every other State, if a man is convicted of a felony and sent to the penitentiary, no matter what the felony is, with imprisonment from life down to two years, the governor can, in his discretion, issue a pardon to the convict, restoring to him his rights as a citizen. But in this statute the punishment that may be inflicted is greater than is inflicted for any crime nearly, except where a man is removed from office by impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be possible for the President to do the same thing in this case as the governor in the case to which he has referred?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not know; but I propose to leave it so that he has the right to exercise that discretion. Suppose there were two boys, 18 or 19 years old, who had taken into their heads that some citizen should not do a certain thing, no matter what it is, that he has a right to do—namely, to vote, to work, we will say. They are young boys, playing a prank, and they do not hurt the man at all. They simply undertake to scare him. They threaten him a little. The boys are convicted in court, and not only fined and imprisoned, but are also deprived forever of the privilege of either voting or holding an office. The punishment is out of all proportion to the crime committed, and the whole thing ought to go out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I want to add just one word. I appreciate the suggestions of the committee in relation to preserving intact the report they have made here and not subjecting it to amendment. But as to this particular amendment, the wisdom and necessity for it, as it seems to me, must be absolutely obvious; so that if this code becomes a law, the very first thing that is necessary to do is to have another statute amending it. Inasmuch as the committee agree that the amendment is really necessary, the change ought to be made. Why enact a statute and lay the foundation for another statute to come later? That is the only suggestion I have to make. It seems to me the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the question that is raised before us in the consideration of this amendment is an attempt to change before the House the provisions of a fundamental law without consideration by the committee. It was a principle adopted by this committee to consider carefully everything of that kind proposed and to act with extreme conservatism. Now, while the arguments presented here by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] are persuasive, while they seem to be controlling, it seems to me to be the better policy to let that bill go before the committee, where it can be carefully considered and many of the objections urged by gentlemen on the other side pointed out and argued. I therefore, on behalf of the committee, shall oppose the amendment and ask the House to vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia, striking out the section.

Mr. DE ARMOND. My colleague [Mr. SMITH of Missouri] desires to offer an amendment perfecting the text.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will pardon me, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The gentleman is about to offer an amendment to the text, and if it is read it will go over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 19 by adding at the end of section the following:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall embrace agreements made by labor or trade unions that result in or effect the declaring of a strike, or boycott has been declared, in a peaceable manner to induce other men from entering into the employment of any company or corporation against which the strike or boycott has been declared, even though such company or corporation be injured thereby in its property rights.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURLESON. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 28.

Mr. PAYNE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands tellers.

The question was taken; and tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] to act as tellers.

Mr. WEBB. A parliamentary inquiry. Is the gentleman from Texas eligible to serve as a teller, when he voted for that side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas called for a division.

The committee divided; and tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 35.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee accordingly rose, the Speaker having resumed the chair, and Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11701 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the vice-president of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company, transmitting the report of the company for the year 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

A letter from Hamilton, Colbert, Yerkes & Hamilton, transmitting the annual report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator and Railway Company for the year ended December 31, 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submitting an estimate of appropriation for additional aids to navigation in the Potomac River—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting the findings in the investigation of the collision between the steamer Larchmont and the schooner Harry Knowlton, in Block Island Sound, on February 11, 1907—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the schooner Fortune, William Hubbard, master—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with recommendation, a draft of a bill to prevent injudicious alienation of their lands by Indians of the Stockbridge-Munsee tribe—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the joint resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 88) to amend the act of March 4, 1907, making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, so as to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to use for rent an increased proportion of the appropriation made by said act for rent for the Bureau of Forestry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 28), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7694) to provide for the purchase of ground for and the erection of a public building for an immigration station, on a site to be selected for said station, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 33), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENRY of Texas, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6231) to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 27), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7606) to amend an act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the village of Bemidji, in Beltrami County, Minn.," approved March 3, 1905, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 29), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WANGER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9087) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 30), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10506) to bridge Colorado River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 31), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles, which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2952) for the relief of Chaplain Henry Swift, Thirteenth Infantry, United States Army—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 5315) granting a pension to Heziah C. Woods—Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12308) granting an increase of pension to Catherine L. Benteen—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12391) restoring the name of Henry L. Beck to the army rolls as captain and providing that he then be placed on the retired list—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5321) granting an increase of pension to William S. O'Brien—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 7952) granting a pension to Thurlow W. Lieurance—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12550) granting a pension to Charles E. Strother—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12551) granting a pension to Will P. Hall—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 11, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMAND OF HOSPITAL SHIP RELIEF.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged report and call for the reading of the resolution and the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 120.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with public interests, to furnish to the House of Representatives, for its information, copies of all official letters, reports, orders, and so forth, filed in the Navy Department in connection with the appointment of Surg. Charles F. Stokes as commander of the United States hospital ship Relief, and also all letters, reports, orders, and so forth, filed in the Navy Department in connection with the appointment and resignation of Rear-Admiral Willard H. Brownson as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred House resolution No. 120, requesting the Secretary of the Navy to furnish to the House of Representatives all official letters, reports, orders, etc., filed in the Navy Department in connection with the appointment of Surg. Charles F. Stokes as commander of the United States hospital ship Relief, and also all letters, reports, orders, etc., in connection with the appointment and resignation of Rear-Admiral Willard H. Brownson as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

That the resolution be amended as follows:

In line 4 strike out the words "so forth" and after the word "and" insert "other papers." In line 8 strike out the words "so forth" and after the word "and" insert "other papers." In line 9 strike out the words "appointment and."

When so amended the committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I present a further privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The special committee which was directed to report to the House plans for the distribution of rooms in the House Office Building and the redistribution of rooms under the control of the House in the Capitol building beg leave to make a further partial report and to recommend the adoption of the following resolution, to wit:

"Resolved, That the following assignment of rooms be, and hereby is, made, to wit:

"IN THE HOUSE OFFICE BUILDING.

"To the Committee on the Census, room 141 and room at southeast corner on the first floor.

"To the Committee on Militia, rooms 284 and 285 in place of room 288, heretofore assigned.

"To the Committee on Private Land Claims, rooms 281 and 282.

"IN THE CAPITOL BUILDING.

"To the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, the rooms heretofore occupied by the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Insular Affairs.

"To the Committee on Mines and Mining, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Patents.

"As an addition to the minority conference room, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

"To the Committee on Education, the room heretofore occupied by the Committee on Private Land Claims.

"Resolved further, That the rooms made out of the ends of corridors heretofore occupied by the Committee on Disposition of Useless Documents in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and the Commitee on Expenditures in the Navy Department be abolished and the space restored as part of the corridors."

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JAMES R. MANN.
JOSEPH H. GAINES.
H. O. YOUNG.
JAMES T. LLOYD.
W. C. ADAMSON.

Mr. MANN. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SHELBY COUNTY, TEX.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6231) to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Shelby County, in the State of Texas, be, and the same is hereby, attached to and made a part of the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of the State of Texas and detached from the Tyler division of said judicial district.

SEC. 2. That all process against persons resident in said county of Shelby and cognizable before the court in said judicial district shall be issued out of and made returnable to said court at Beaumont, and that all prosecutions against persons for offenses committed in said county shall be tried in said court at Beaumont: Provided, That no civil or criminal cause begun and pending prior to the passage of this act shall be in any way affected by it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I suppose this bill has been reported unanimously.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Unanimously reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Texas, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the report of the committee printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the printing in the RECORD of the report of the committee. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Report (by Mr. HENRY of Texas) is as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary has had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6231) to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district, and report as follows:

The county of Shelby, in the eastern district of the State of Texas, is now attached to the court held at Tyler. It appears that the county of Shelby has direct railroad connection with the city of Beaumont and does not have direct railroad connection with the city of Tyler; that litigants, jurors, and persons who have to attend the district and circuit court from Shelby County are now required to go overland for a part of the way and travel over three different railroads to get to Tyler; that Beaumont is nearer to Shelby County than is Tyler, and that it is less expensive and requires less time to reach Beaumont than Tyler; that Shelby County in a financial and business way is more closely connected with Beaumont than it is with Tyler; that it is more economical and will be a saving to the Government in expense for Shelby County to be attached to the Beaumont division of said district; that the bar and the county and precinct officers of Shelby County have, by petition, asked that the said county be attached to the Beaumont division.

Therefore your committee reports this bill favorably and recommends that it do pass.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of this House 2,000 copies of the opinion and of the dissenting opinion of the Supreme Court in the cases of Howard, administratrix, v. Illinois Central Railroad Company, and Brooks, administratrix, v. Southern Pacific Company, being decisions of that court relating to the constitutionality of the employers' liability law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS MONONGAHELA RIVER, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. WANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9087) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 of an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized be not commenced within one year and completed within three years from February 21, 1908."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, is this unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. WANGER. Unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the bridge is to be constructed under the general law and subject to its limitations?

Mr. WANGER. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The following committee amendments were read and agreed to:

In line 7, after the word "three," insert the words "as amended by the acts approved January 11, 1905, February 21, 1906, and February 5, 1907."

In line 8, after the word "hereby," insert the word "further."

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. WANGER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF VOLUNTEERS IN SPANISH WAR.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 3923) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limitation of the act approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to amend an act approved March 3, 1899, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898,' etc., and for other purposes," and the limitations of the acts of which it is amendatory shall be January 1, 1910.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know the reason for this.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I will send to the Clerk's desk the report, which will explain the matter quite as fully as it can be done otherwise.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to hearing the report read, but my observation is that reports are of very little use to be read.

Mr. DE ARMOND. This is a very brief report, and contains the entire explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3923) to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The act of July 8, 1898, the act of March 3, 1899, amending it, and the act of April 24, 1904, amending the last-mentioned act—the titles of all which acts are set forth in the bill—provide, among other things, for payment to the volunteer officers and soldiers of the war with Spain for the time between their assembling at rendezvous and muster in, payment to be made through the State and Territorial governors; nothing on this account to go into any State or Territorial treasury, but only to the volunteer officers and soldiers.

The volunteers in most of the States have received this allowance, but those of a few States have not. In a few cases claims have not been presented by the governors, who alone can present them, and some claims filed are regarded as defective in form of statement, because not minutely itemized.

No limitation is fixed in the 1898 act; that of the act of 1899 is January 1, 1902, and that of the act of 1904 is January 1, 1906. The sole purpose of this bill is to make the limitation January 1, 1910, and its enactment into law would have no other effect.

By its enactment the comparatively few volunteer officers and men of the war with Spain who have not yet received what these acts entitle them to may, through the governors of their respective States, be placed upon equal footing with their comrades in arms from other States; so that those equal in merit may, as they should, fare alike.

It is the unanimous judgment of the committee that the enactment into law of this bill will be simple justice to those whom it would affect, and will accomplish the legislative will embodied in the acts heretofore mentioned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it is now nearly ten years since the Spanish-American war ceased. Here are four statutes that have been passed to pay for the time between the assembling of the volunteer forces and the time they were mustered into the service. The money ought to have been paid to them, if ever at all, five or six years ago. What is the reason for the delay? Is it the red tape and minutiæ in the Department of this Government, the War Department here, or is it the fault of the men who are claimants, the fault of the governors of the States and Territories? It is of course somebody's fault.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Speaker, I can not answer definitely, but I can state briefly what the facts of the matter are. Provision is made in these various acts for the reimbursement of the States for the equipping and transportation of troops of the Spanish war. Provision also is made for paying the officers and men—the volunteers—at the usual rate of compensation for the time between the gathering at rendezvous and the muster in. Most of the officers and men from most of the States have received this allowance. The officers and men from a few States—and the State which I inhabit among them—have not received it. It is provided in the act that where a claim is presented in behalf of a State for reimbursement on account of any outlay made by the State for the benefit of the General Government in the clothing and equipment and transportation of troops, that claim shall be duly itemized. The reason for that is very plain.

The claim of the State of Missouri—and I know more about that than the others—was presented without itemizing for this allowance to officers and men. The State did not pay out anything for the National Government for equipment, for transportation, or for subsistence. The law provided—why I know not, any more than anybody else knows—that all claims should be preferred through the governors of the States. No soldier, no officer can present a claim himself, because the law does not provide for that.

Now, this claim of the State of Missouri, as I say, "not for reimbursement," but presented for this allowance for officers and men, was not itemized. The facts upon which the claim rests are on file in the office of the adjutant-general in Missouri and on file in the Bureau of the Auditor of the War Department in this city. It was believed that itemizing was entirely unnecessary and would throw no light on the matter, everything being shown by the files of the War Department. However, it was discovered after presenting the claim that there had been a ruling by the Comptroller of the Treasury to the effect that all claims presented under the law should be itemized. Now, then, it was thought that the simpler and better way, with reference to these claims and others in the same situation, would be to get an extension, if it can be had by action of Congress, of the time in which these claims can be filed in itemized form, rather than to go to the Court of Claims and there contest the soundness of the ruling of the Comptroller of the Treasury. I believe that the ruling is erroneous. I believe the itemized statement is meant to apply, when it does apply, to instances where the State claims reimbursement. It would, of course, be objectionable to present a claim for a State for reimbursement, say, for $10,592.14, on account of the equipment of troops and the transportation of troops, with no items set out.

The claim, however, in this instance, and I think in all instances that will come under this act if it be passed extending the time limit, is solely for officers and men; and unless there be legislation of this kind the officers and men who have not yet received this allowance, which those of other States have received, will be denied it entirely or they will have in some sort of a way to get up some kind of an organization of their own and proceed to the Court of Claims, a very cumbersome sort of procedure to secure very plain rights. I would very much prefer that payment be made directly from the Treasury, and I think it would have been better to so provide in the first instance, but it is not so in the law; and the purpose of this bill is solely to extend the time within which these claims may be presented.

This bill, differing only in the particular of the date—this limit is January 1, 1910—was passed by the last House and was not taken up in the Senate. It then was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Judiciary and was passed unanimously by this House. Again it has been reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary, and now it is before the House for its disposition.

Mr. MANN. When does the limitation in the present law expire?

Mr. DE ARMOND. It expired on the 1st of January, 1906, and the matter is just simply tied up. The soldiers will have to go to the Court of Claims or be denied what has been given to others similarly situated, unless aided by this kind of legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DE ARMOND, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF COMMITTEE REPORTS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution No. 1, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Is this the resolution that was referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Has it been reported?

Mr. PERKINS. I have the report here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman now makes the report. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That publications ordered printed by Congress, or either House thereof, shall be in four series, namely: One series of reports made by the committees of the Senate, to be known as Senate reports; one series of reports made by the committees of the House of Representatives, to be known as House reports; one series of documents other than reports of committees, the orders for printing which originate in the Senate, to be known as Senate documents, and one series of documents other than committee reports, the orders for printing which originate in the House of Representatives, to be known as House documents. The publications in each series shall be consecutively numbered, the numbers in each series continuing in unbroken sequence throughout the entire term of a Congress, but the foregoing provision shall not apply to the documents printed for the use of the Senate in executive session: Provided, That of the "usual number," the copies which are intended for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories of all annual or serial publications originating in or prepared by an Executive Department, bureau, office, commission, or board shall not be numbered in the document or report series of either House of Congress, but shall be designated by title and bound as hereinafter provided, and the departmental edition, if any, shall be printed concurrently with the "usual number."

SEC. 2. That in the binding of Congressional documents and reports for distribution by the superintendent of documents to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories, every publication of sufficient size on any one subject shall hereafter be bound separately and receive the title suggested by the subject of the volume, and the others shall be distributed in unbound form as soon as printed. The Public Printer shall supply the superintendent of documents sufficient copies of those publications distributed in unbound form, to be bound and distributed to the State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories for their permanent files. The library edition, as well as all other bound sets of Congressional numbered documents and reports, shall be arranged in volumes and bound in the manner directed by the Joint Committee on Printing.

SEC. 3. That section 2 of an act to amend an act providing for the public printing and binding, etc., approved March 1, 1907, is hereby repealed.

With the following amendment:

On page 2, line 14, after the word "number," insert the words:

And provided further, That hearings of committees may be printed as Congressional documents only when specifically ordered by Congress or either House thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And meets with the approval of the minority members of that committee. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question with reference to these amendments.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I see that this amendment provides that hearings of committees may be printed as documents only when specifically ordered by Congress or either House thereof. Sometimes there are very important hearings on a dozen different bills before the House. Does this in any way interfere with the right of the different committees to have a specific number of those hearings printed for the use of the committees?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not change the law at all. It leaves the committees the power which they now have to have printed for their own use such number as they see fit; but it does not allow those reports to go into what are called the public documents which are distributed at large into the various libraries. It in no way interferes with what is desired by the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PERKINS, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RESTRICTION OF RIGHT OF APPEAL IN HABEAS CORPUS PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4777) restricting in certain cases the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from a final decision by a court of the United States in a proceeding in habeas corpus where the detention complained of is by virtue of process issued out of a State court no appeal to the Supreme Court shall be allowed unless the United States court by which the final decision was rendered or a justice of the Supreme Court shall be of opinion that there exists probable cause for an appeal, in which event, on allowing the same, the said court or justice shall certify that there is probable cause for such allowance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of this bill. It seems to be a rather important one.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I will state the occasion for this legislation arises from the fact that under the existing law there are a large number of groundless appeals prosecuted to the Supreme Court of the United States in habeas corpus proceedings in capital cases. It seems that the law is such that it is only necessary in the proceedings to suggest a frivolous or fictitious Federal question, have the petition overruled, and then take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, which delays the execution of a sentence anywhere from one to two years, as the case may be.

And there is no power to-day in the statute or on the part of the court to prevent the prosecution of these groundless appeals. If a man has been there once he can go right back, start his habeas corpus proceedings again, and go right over the same case. Now, this bill provides that no appeal shall be prosecuted unless the judge making the final adverse decision shall hold or certify that there is probable cause, or unless a justice of the Supreme Court on his part shall certify that there is probable cause. It gives the courts control of the situation and enables them to prevent these endless delays.

Mr. SHERLEY. What opportunity does this give to apply to a justice of the Supreme Court for the issuing of an order that would authorize the appeal?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Simply the ordinary opportunity that the representative of the defendant now has.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the bill, however, the denial by a Federal judge of the writ of habeas corpus would end the matter unless he certified that there was such a question as would make it proper to have the Supreme Court review it, or unless a justice of the Supreme Court should order it to that court. Now, I am simply asking what opportunity there might be in a case where the lower Federal judge denied the right of habeas corpus for the petitioner to go to a justice of of the Supreme Court. Would not the matter be so ended that before he would have an opportunity whatever right was involved would be lost?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, a man might wait so late that the capital sentence would be executed on his client because he did not have time to get his application to the court, but if he exercises ordinary diligence and does not wait as they now wait, until about the last minute, and then take advantage of this statute and prosecute his appeal, that nobody can now prevent, he would have no difficulty in having his rights protected. It does not change the statute in that respect at all so far as the mode of procedure is concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LITTLEFIELD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REVISION OF CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal codification bill, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee arose last night the pending question was an amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] rise?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New Jersey withhold his amendment for a moment until the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] can be recognized to make a motion in regard to his amendment?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. With the understanding that I be recognized afterwards.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of having my amendment corrected, especially as to the party who offered it. It is in the RECORD as offered by Mr. BOOHER of Missouri, whereas I offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment for the present in order to correct it. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Now, Mr. Chairman, that leaves my amendment withdrawn. I desire now to offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment to section 19 of the Criminal Code, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall embrace any agreements made by labor or trade unions that shall result in or affect the declaring of a strike or boycott, nor any efforts in the exercise of free speech made by such labor or trade unions after such strike or boycott shall have been declared: Provided, Such efforts are made in a peaceable manner: And provided further, That they are made for the purpose of inducing nonunion persons to act with them and against the company or corporation against which the strike or boycott has been declared, even though such company or corporation be injured thereby in its property rights.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed to mar the harmony of the codification or revision of the Federal criminal code, which has been reported to this House by the Commission on Revision. I know how well committees are in love with their work. I have no criticism to offer against their work. I am sure it has been done conscientiously and with ability. But it has been conceded on all sides by those who have engaged in the discussion of this statute that it is of the broadest import, and what it does not include is what we are trying to discover. It seems to include everything, even according to some of the gentlemen who are on the committee.

There has been a contest all along the ages between legislative bodies and the judiciary. Sometimes the courts trench upon the legislative authority, and then again the legislative authority trenches upon the courts. I am not here to pronounce any personal criticism upon our courts.

I have as much respect for the judiciary of this country as any person. I admire its great ability. Yet it will not be denied by any lawyer of experience that courts are inclined to legislate, and often extend their jurisdiction beyond fair interpretation, so as to embrace subjects within statutes, by construction, that were never intended to be so embraced. Taking for a basis the admission of the gentlemen of the committee that it is an extraordinarily broad statute, I am not clearly convinced, but, on the contrary, I believe that it includes the very kind of agreements with respect to strikes by trades unions which are protected by my amendment.

I believe the labor and trades unions of this country have an inherent right to agree to strike and not be charged with a conspiracy; and when the courts talk about it, and when the legislative bodies talk about it, they concede that trades unions have ample rights to make agreements, to make contracts, and to declare strikes; but when they endeavor to obtain the fruits of their efforts in the way of a strike, then it is that they are enjoined by some court of equity or met by some legislative enactment for fear they may give some inconvenience or annoyance to the public, and therefore their efforts are suppressed by some willing court. There is a conflict, as we all know, between capital and labor, notwithstanding it is strenuously denied in some quarters. I am just as friendly to capital as I am to labor, but the power of capital is so great and tremendous in our civilization as to minimize, to impair, and to weaken every effort made by labor for relief. I am here for the purpose of giving to labor, as far as I am able, every opportunity for a fair hearing in the courts, as well as to protect them by every statute that may be enacted here from time to time. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to extend his remarks until their conclusion.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. That the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

Mr. PAYNE. I shall object to that.

Mr. MANN. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. About five minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I believe this section is broad enough to cover labor contracts and agreements, especially when trades unions are arranging and preparing for a strike. I believe, furthermore, that it is broad enough to prohibit labor unions, when a strike is on, from arranging with outside persons, looking to the agitation and discussion of the cause of the strike for the purpose of inducing such persons to stand and act with them. I believe the right of free speech under the Constitution should and does extend to labor unions, and to those who believe as they do and who cooperate with them to agitate, educate, and discuss the cause of the strike or boycott and bring the public, if possible, to their way of thinking. I am not one of those who believe the public ought not to suffer. A little suffering will do it good; it needs to be awakened to the demands of labor. Every great reform entails more or less sacrifice on the part of the public.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, in his knowledge, this section 19, which we are now considering, has ever been invoked by any court or person for the purpose of regulating or punishing or interfering in any way with a labor organization?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. That may be, but that is no reason why it may never be invoked.

Mr. DRISCOLL. As far as you know, has it?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I do not know that it has. I was connected with a case not many years ago wherein a divided court was so strenuous in its efforts to prevent my clients, who were individuals, from committing a great fraud upon a pool of five great railroads that had secured a charter from the State of Illinois and the passage of an act of Congress to bridge the Mississippi River at Thebes, Mo., that, in order to prevent this alleged fraud, a majority of the court construed, and held, that a statute which had been enacted for the building of bridges across inland creeks and streams twenty years before a mile of railroad had ever been built in the State, embraced interstate bridges across great navigable streams, and by virtue of this local bridge act, great railroad bridges might be built as mentioned, and, further, that the bridge company had power under the act to condemn all the land necessary for approaches and terminals, and even for terminal yards.

Hence, it is not always safe to trust too much to the wisdom of the courts; in fact, I am not ready to concede that there is more wisdom in the courts than there is in a coordinate legislative body fresh from the people, and I do not believe in leaving any more to the interpretation of statutes by judges than can be avoided. The best we can do is poor enough when making laws, and any law that is kaleidoscopic should be made by amendment as certain and definite as possible, or it should be repealed. More particularly should this be the case with criminal statutes.

I have read section 19 as carefully as I am capable of reading it, and it does occur to me that the language is broad enough to embrace agreements discussed and made by any labor or trades unions about to enter upon and getting ready to declare a strike or boycott, and particularly any policy that might be adopted by such unions which may rest upon agreements, when undertaking by arguments and persuasion to induce other persons, not members of the unions, not to take employment of or do service for the company or corporation against which the strike or boycott has been ordered. I concede that the section was not enacted to correct what are often termed abuses of trades unions, but for a wholly different purpose. Yet, that does not prevent such agreements as I am speaking of from being included in this omnibus section and by it made a conspiracy.

The country knows that when a great interstate railroad corporation comes into court, with counsel who have a monopoly on the law and capacity for explaining it, that courts become wonderfully sensitive to the situation, and especially do they feel called upon to guard the great public from "labor outrages," and as a rule they find a way of doing so in keeping with judicial interpretation.

I again repeat that agreements to strike may be entered into by and between different unions or locals, and with separate officers of the unions, in the employment of the company against whom the strike is brought. And the unions may desire to arrange with outside persons who sympathize with the strikers, to have them to agitate and to educate others to their way of thinking and thereby induce them, in a most peaceable manner, by the use of effective, and yet free speech, not to take employment from the company. This course of conduct as to labor unions is, in my opinion, lawful and in keeping with the spirit of the Constitution and should be permitted to continue and be forever perpetuated without the slightest question. The case of the Ann Arbor and Toledo Railway Company v. the Pennsylvania Railway Company et al., decided by Judge Taft in 1892 and reported in 54 Federal Reporter, has bred a number of opinions that have almost destroyed the effectiveness of the strike or the boycott.

In the leading case I have just referred to former Judge Taft, now Secretary of War, took advanced ground, and held that a laborer could not withhold or bestow his labor for the purpose of inducing a railroad company, against which a strike has been declared, to treat with its striking employees, or, in other words, to accept their demands. That is, a strike called out of sympathy for other strikers may be enjoined on the ground, as I shall state it, that the railroad against which the strike had been declared would be forced to yield to the demands of the strikers or suffer great injury and cause the railroads involved to violate the interstate-commerce act. It would make no difference how unjust the conduct of the complaining railroad had been to its employees. By this decision of Chancellor Taft (for when he wrote this opinion he was sitting as an equity court) held that a railroad company, although at fault, could or might take advantage of its own fault, for if it did not take this advantage it would be forced into the attitude of violating the interstate-commerce act. This is Judge Taft's language:

> But it is said that it can not be unlawful for an employee either to threaten to quit or actually to quit the service when not in violation of his contract, because a man has an inalienable right to bestow his labor where he will and to withhold his labor as he will. Generally speaking, this is true, but not absolutely. If he uses the benefit which his labor is or will be to another by threatening to withhold it, or agreeing to bestow it, or by actually withholding it or bestowing it, for the purpose of inducing, procuring, or compelling that other to commit an unlawful or criminal act, the withholding or bestowing of his labor for such a purpose is itself an unlawful and criminal act. The same is true with regard to the exercise of the right of property. A man has the right to give or sell his property where he will; but if he give or sell it, or refuse to give or sell it, as a means of inducing or compelling another to commit an unlawful act, his giving or selling it or refusal to do so is itself unlawful.

I desire to include that part of the court's opinion which deals with the boycott and to call attention to its hazy and metaphysical character. He has difficulty, and very great difficulty, in his deliverance, but the injunction was made perpetual and the strike was ended by the court. These are Judge Taft's words:

> As usually understood, a boycott is a combination of many to cause a loss to one person by coercing others, against their will, to withdraw from him their beneficial business intercourse through threats that, unless those others do so, the many will cause similar loss to them. Ordinarily, when such a combination of persons does not use violence, actual or threatened, to accomplish their purpose it is difficult to point out with clearness the illegal means or end which makes the combination an unlawful conspiracy; for it is generally lawful for the combiners to withdraw their intercourse and its benefits from any person, and to announce their intention of doing so, and it is equally lawful for the others, of their own motion, to do that which the combiners seek to compel them to do. Such combinations are said to be unlawful conspiracies, though the acts in themselves and considered singly are innocent, when the acts are done with malice—i. e., with the intention to injure another without lawful excuse.

I am unalterably for this amendment, and I hope that it will be adopted, for I believe that every American citizen is entitled to the exercise of the right of free speech, and I believe that every trades union in organizing and agreeing to order a strike or boycott, and every member of such union in furtherance of the strike or boycott, has the constitutional and legal right to agitate, educate, persuade and induce, and form agreements as long as everything is done peaceably and decently, without being chargeable with entering into some unlawful conspiracy or being subject to indictment therefor, or of being injured by some high court of chancery, with the probability of getting into jail before the court gets through with him. This decision is the mother of a whole brood of the same kind, and of some even worse, and legislation will be necessary yet to circumscribe the limits of these very conservative and "patriotic" Federal judges in their antilabor opinions.

There is not much danger of the wage-earner getting more than his dues in this corporation-ridden and capitalist-ridden country. I had rather be found on the side of the oppressed of all ages than against them, even if in doubt as to my exact legal status in the matter. I trust the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the substitute which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> In line 15, after the words "United States," insert a semicolon and add the following words:
> "Provided, however, That it shall not be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into an agreement to leave or to refuse to enter the employ of any person, copartnership, or corporation, or to advise, persuade, or induce others to do so."

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am in thorough sympathy with the object aimed at by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH], who offered the amendment, but I am of the belief that it may be unconstitutional, inasmuch as it attempts to deal with labor unions specifically, and the substitute that I have sent to the Clerk's desk embodies the language of an act of the State of New Jersey which was placed upon the books of that State under the following circumstances:

About twenty-five years ago, in a machine shop in the city of Paterson, five or six, or perhaps ten, machinists engaged in a strike. That strike was carried along for some time, until some diligent gentleman discovered that it was a conspiracy against the common law for two men to get together and agree to quit work at one and the same time; and these men were indicted for a common-law conspiracy and sent to the State prison of the State of New Jersey.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is aware that the common law constitutes no part of the criminal law of the Federal courts.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I understand that, but I want to say that the provisions of this section are every bit as broad as the common law, and, further, that the courts of my State have held that a manufacturer is constitutionally entitled to a free flow of labor to his plant, and any manufacturer under the statute can come into the courts of the United States and show that a labor union, or any body of strikers, have got together for the purpose of interfering with the free flow of labor to his plant, and consequently they are offending against this provision of the Constitution; and then they would be burned at the stake or boiled in oil, or whatever is the penalty provided for in this section. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, it will be contended here by members of the committee, and has already been contended, that this section is not intended to affect combinations of this kind. Well, if it is not intended to affect combinations of this kind, let us say so. It is true, perhaps, as the gentleman from New York has said, that no prosecutions have been instituted under this statute. Perhaps the gentlemen who are interested in that kind of prosecutions have not known that there was such a statute, and perhaps this very discussion will point it out to them; and I say, gentlemen, as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said yesterday, it is a dragnet statute, and in my judgment includes every labor union and every striking body of men in this country.

I want this committee to have that knowledge before it. I want the members of this Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on both sides to decide this question from that standpoint, and to stand up here and say whether or not they are willing to take the chance that any six or seven men who go on strike in a little shop in any part of this country may become subject to the provisions of the section.

It is now well settled in my State, not as a criminal proposition, but as an equitable one by the court of chancery, that a manufacturer has a constitutional right to a free flow of labor. Workmen have been enjoined from going to a man whom they thought was about to start to work in a plant at which a strike was in progress and informing him of the condition of affairs existing at the said plant, even though this man was a member of their own union. They have also been enjoined from the publication or posting of a notice of this kind, even though directed to their own members. This has been regarded as an interference with the constitutional right of the employer. If it is an interference with his constitutional right, it is a criminal violation of this statute, and the men who do it and the men who join with them become subject to all these punishments and penalties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks that the time of the gentleman from New Jersey be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have simply to say that I have no particular pride of authorship in this amendment nor any desire to prevent the work of the learned and able committee of this House being adopted, but I want the membership of this body to consider this question before passing upon it, as I know it will, now that attention has been called to it. I am willing and ready to accept any language suggested by the committee in charge of the bill or any Member of the House that will bring about the result aimed at, which is simply to make it absolutely certain that no striking workmen shall be subject to the awful pains and punishment of this most drastic provision. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose the amendment and the substitute first, because I do not believe the committee thus early in the consideration of this bill should establish the precedent of using the bill as a means for legislation not considered by any committee. In the course of the reading of this bill will be found sections relating to many matters, and if we are to make it the means of legislation on all the subjects that are being agitated now we had best dispense with all other committees of the House and continue in this Committee of the Whole for the rest of the session and start to work, for we will have many months of hard labor.

I shall oppose both amendments for other reasons. In my judgment the section does not in any sense apply to the conditions that the gentlemen portray. If there have been grave abuses—and I for one think there have been abuses in regard to labor matters—they have not been abuses growing out of an indictment under this section of strikers or members of labor unions, but they have been caused by issuing injunctions in civil processes in the Federal courts. I for one am willing to limit that power, but I do not think that question is germane to the particular section under discussion. If members of the committee will simply read the section, they will find that it says:

> If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise of a right guaranteed by the Constitution and laws of the United States, they shall be punished, etc.

Now, one of the elements must be a conspiracy against a right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. I say to this House that if there is a right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, a conspiracy against that right ought to be punished. [Applause.] If the right guaranteed by the Constitution is a wrong right, amend your Constitution, but do not undertake to disregard it by passing an act that a violation of the constitutional right shall not be punished.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I did not claim any constitutional right was threatened, but merely that the court of chancery holds it to be a constitutional right.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that is the understanding of the gentleman's contention, he is simply speaking about a matter that has no connection with this statute and his amendment is not germane in any sense.

Now, gentlemen, let us not be led astray by hardships in cases portrayed by gentlemen or by political agitation outside. I believe I have a proper appreciation of the rights and the hardships of the laboring man. I have never constituted myself a special champion, because, without meaning to reflect upon anybody, my experience in life has been that those who claim to hold a brief for a special class or set of persons are not always the truest friends of the interests of those persons. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman seems to hinge his objection to this amendment on the ground that rights that are guaranteed by the Constitution, if they are conspired against, should be punished; but this section I wish to call to his attention goes further, and protects rights guaranteed not only by the Constitution, but by the laws, and is not the gentleman's argument somewhat unfair in omitting to call attention to that fact?

Mr. SHERLEY. I assure the gentleman that the omission was not with any intention to mislead the House and I am glad that he has called my attention to it, because, while the argument as to the Constitution has additional weight by reason of the sanctity of that instrument, it also has weight as pertaining to the laws. I answer you again, if you have a law upon the statute books that gives a right, then as long as that law is there you ought to punish conspiracies to violate that right. The remedy is, if you have by law conferred a right that ought not to have been conferred, to repeal that law and not to authorize the disregard of the law and law breaking.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. That is what we are trying to do now, is it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; it is not. It is not what they are trying to do. The proposition is not to take away any right that may exist, but it is to say that if men conspire against a right that exists they shall not be punished—an entirely different proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman whether that statute is not capable of a great many imaginary things.

Mr. SHERLEY. I answer the gentleman that anything is capable of imaginary things, and that this statute, to be perfectly frank, is a very broad statute, and it could be abused; but that is true of many, many laws, as I took occasion to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to ask the gentleman this question. If the rights secured are not only those guaranteed by the Constitution, but by the laws, as the gentleman suggests, and this section seeks to provide for conspiracy against rights that are guaranteed only by the law, would not the penal part of the law take care of that in every case? And why do we need for rights that are not constitutional this additional protection?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman's statement as I understand it is not quite correct. The reason for this is that there are many offenses which become serious when the result of conspiracy, that are not serious when simply the result of individual action, and it is always necessary in any form of penal law to have a general provision covering certain classes of cases, and the criticism should simply be to see whether that general provision is properly hedged around. Now, what is offered here is not aiming at the real evil. You do not undertake to do away with the bad law that creates a wrongful legal right, but you undertake to authorize people to disregard the law. What we need in America is to teach the people to obey the law and not to disregard the law.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman I do not think apprehends my question entirely. I say this. If the law provides a punishment in each case, for each penal statute does, why do you need this extra provision here?

Mr. SHERLEY. Simply because those sections that do provide penalties for certain acts relate to individual acts and not to acts of conspiracy. It is an entirely different thing. The gentleman is a good enough lawyer to know that in all ages it has been held a much graver offense to conspire to do certain things than for an individual to undertake the doing of those things. I want to come back to this proposition. It is true that a section may be abused. There is no power given to government that may not be abused, but the whole theory of government rests and must rest upon a belief in the integrity of the judiciary and in the integrity of your jury. This is not a section that will give power to a Federal judge by his own will to do some wrongful act against the laboring man. Under the section there must be indictment by a grand jury, there must be a trial before a petit jury; the man shall have the right to be confronted by the witnesses and to cross-examine them and to be represented by counsel. All the safeguards that the Anglo-Saxon law has thrown around the rights and liberties of the individual will be thrown around those who are accused under this section.

If they are guilty of conspiracy against the enjoyment of a right guaranteed by the Constitution or the laws, they ought to be punished. Let us be frank and manly in the matter. Let us deal with the labor question properly when it comes up. I for one will be glad of the opportunity, but do not let us take advantage of the penal code, undertaking simply to present a revision, bringing in no new law, and use it as a handle for a crude piece of legislation that will not even accomplish what the gentlemen are after, because most of your problems are problems growing not out of a violation of a right claimed under the Federal law, but a right claimed under the State law, and the Federal court gets jurisdiction by virtue of citizenship and not by virtue of the subject-matter; and if you want to aim at it, if you want to legislate, legislate completely, but let us have enough candor to realize that this is not the time for that kind of a law.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] yield to his colleague [Mr. JAMES]?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. If I understand the gentleman correctly, he takes the position that this section could not be invoked against laboring people, either in quitting employment or going to places and asking others to quit.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think not.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Then why not let that be made clear?

Mr. SHERLEY. My answer to the gentleman is simply this, that if you are to put as addenda or provisos to a law everything that the law does not pertain to, you will have a rather voluminous set of statutes.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Would it not be better to have a voluminous set of statutes than to have the laboring people of this country imposed upon by Federal judges? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman forgets the fact that no Federal judge can impose upon the laboring man by virtue of this provision. It requires a grand jury and requires a petit jury. And the gentleman can not state a single case in his knowledge where there has been a trial under this section.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. The gentleman, living in Kentucky, is aware of the fact that Federal judges direct grand juries as well as petit juries what to do, and I know that the gentleman has had experience that will make him appreciate that statement.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can also say that the circuit courts of appeals reverse judges when they do those things.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. And the laboring men lie in jail until the reversal is had. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. No, they do not, because they are entitled to bail, and because even if the district judge should undertake to instruct the grand jury or petit jury, he must have a compliance by them in those instructions in order to accomplish his effect. And I, for one, have enough belief in the manhood and in the integrity of the citizenship of America to believe that twelve men upon their oaths in the jury box will have the courage to stand against any judge that undertakes to violate the law.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I know I have great respect, and as much, perhaps, as the gentleman has for the citizenship of the United States. The gentleman says that a laboring man can give a bond. Now, that is, provided, of course, that he has friends who have sufficient means to make the bond good. He might have to stay in jail without bond.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, his case would be as hard as that of any other innocent man who is wrongfully imprisoned, but it would not be any harder. I want to make a statement here that will not be misunderstood by those who know me, and who desire to deal frankly with me and with this question. I believe the laboring man is entitled to his rights, but I do not believe the time has come in this country when any class of men are entitled to special rights over any other class of men. [Applause on the Republican side.] My Americanism begins and ends there. I am willing to defend him, and I have defended him in my own country and in my own district, but I am not willing to be demagogic about him [applause] and I am not willing to take this section and make it the instrument for legislation that is not germane, but which is crude, and has not been considered by a committee of this House.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Does the gentleman regard these amendments as demagogical?

Mr. SHERLEY. By no means. I make no reflection on any man. They are not. But I tell you what I do think. I think that they will not accomplish their purpose. I think they are not germane in the true sense, and I think they ought not to be considered by the Committee of the Whole House until they have been carefully considered by one of the regular committees of the House.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky, that we should be very cautious about amending a report of this character, which is a revision of the criminal laws of the United States, but is seems to me when we have reached a section which this House would not think of reenacting, that we should consider the propriety of absolutely striking it from the law.

The gentleman from Kentucky has said that conspiracy is a very grave offense. He is correct about that. But the section of the bill which the House has just passed over provides for punishing a conspiracy to destroy the Government of the United States and to levy war upon the United States by the maximum imprisonment of six years in the penitentiary. But this section, which deals with conspiracies which have for their object to threaten or defeat some right of a man under the Constitution and laws, provides for taking away all civil rights and in addition an imprisonment for ten years. There can be no justification for such disparity of penalties. If a State legislature should pass a law that if two men should conspire to injure some man in his person or his rights the penalty should be hanging or imprisonment for a term of years, it would be precisely analogous to this case, because that would cover murder, which might, perhaps, in the minds if some justify hanging; but it would cover assault and battery, and it would be within the power of the court to sentence a man to be hung for simply an assault and battery. This section is drawn after the dragnet fashion. It does not at all differentiate between rights, but the threatening of any right under the laws, whether the right be important or not, would carry the loss of citizenship. Under the laws of the country, for instance, a man may engage in interstate commerce. If two or three men conspire to prevent him from enjoying this right or to threaten him, they would be subject to this enormous penalty. I agree that there should be some punishment, but it should bear some relation to the crime. Without addressing myself to either amendment now before the committee, I do not believe the committee would enact such a section as this to-day, and therefore if the opportunity is given to me I shall vote to strike it out of the law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I do not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to be opposing the amendment pending.

Mr. McCALL. Not at all. I am simply addressing myself to the section.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, the section of the pending bill now under consideration has well been termed the "dragnet" conspiracy section. Its broad, vague, and indefinite terms may at a glance appear inoffensive and harmless; but on a closer scrutiny and analysis will be found fraught with a scope, force, and expansive application almost immeasurable and indescribable. Let me read the first part of the section:

SEC. 19. If two or more persons conspire to injure, oppress, threaten, or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States * * * they shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years. * * *

I will now read the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Missouri]:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall embrace any agreements made by labor or trade unions that shall result in or affect the declaring of a strike or boycott, nor any efforts in the exercise of free speech made by such labor or trade unions after such strike or boycott shall have been declared: Provided, That such efforts are made in a peaceable manner: And provided further, That they are made for the purpose of inducing nonunion persons to act with them and against the company or corporation against which the strike or boycott has been declared, even though such company or corporation be injured thereby in its property rights.

I now wish to call the attention of the House to the language of the substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]:

Provided, however, That it shall not be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into an agreement to leave or to refuse to enter the employ of any person, copartnership, or corporation, or to advise, persuade, or induce others to do so.

Gentlemen in charge of this bill have on the floor of this House stated various reasons for opposing the adoption of either the original amendment or the substitute. They say on one hand that the original section is not capable of such construction as would make it apply to labor disputes or strikes, and that the amendment or substitute is unnecessary. On the other hand, they say that if this section is applicable to such matters, we ought not now to undertake to remedy this feature of the bill, notwithstanding that we are considering the bill section by section for the express purpose of now, here, putting it into proper form to become part and parcel of the law of our land, but that we should await some more convenient season in order to remedy this evil; that the beauty and harmony and simplicity of diction of the bill would be marred by engrafting upon it provisos calculated to exempt this or that act or thing from its operation.

It seems to me that these suggestions are wholly without force or merit. That the language of the original section of this bill is very broad, vague, indefinite, and uncertain must be conceded by every candid mind. That it is capable of application to almost every conceivable invasion of vested rights, however trivial, if the actors are two or more acting in unison, is apparent to every lawyer. That it is likely to become the subject of serious contention and much uncertainty of decision can well be foreseen. Why, then, should this statute be reenacted in that condition? It has been the reproach of the written law that its provisions were too often veiled in uncertainty, sometimes through the carelessness or ignorance of the lawmaking body, though sometimes through design. Everyone is held to know the law and be bound by its provisions, whether he, in fact, ever heard of the law or not. Why should not the language of the law be made as plain and specific as the intelligence of the author and his command of language, the vehicle of his thoughts, will admit? The people are surely entitled to that. It was the tyrant Caligula who wrote his laws in very small characters and hung them upon high pillars where they could illy be seen and read, in order that the people might thereby be even more effectually ensnared. Can it be possible that it is the wish of any Member of this House to reenact this law in such terms as to contain a covert meaning and application which no one would dare publicly espouse and defend as right and proper? [Applause.] It is probably true that it was not the intention of the framers of this section, when it was originally adopted, to give it such a construction as would make criminal the acts of laboring men in declaring a strike and adhering to its terms.

In my opinion the framers of the section had a different purpose in view; but I do say that, in my opinion and in the opinion of many others in this House, there is grave danger that some Federal judge will be found too soon who is ready to put his seal of approval on such construction of this section as will make felons of those honest men of toil who are trying by the only legitimate means in their power to exact fair treatment at the hands of their employers. [Applause.] Every lawyer knows that it has been but a few years since the first decision was rendered by our Federal courts holding men guilty of criminal conspiracy and contempt of court because they went onto a strike and refused to serve some of our great railroad corporations. Look, if you please, to the case of United States v. Kane, in 30 Federal Reporter; to the Ann Arbor Railway case, in 54 Federal Reporter; to the Phelan contempt case, in 63 Federal Reporter—the latter two decisions having been rendered by the then circuit judge, Hon. William H. Taft, now a prominent candidate for the very highest office in this land—and you will see an evolution of construction the tendency of which bodes nothing but ill for the laboring man. It may be true, as reported in the public press, that the very distinguished jurist just mentioned has modified his harsh views toward organized labor, now that he is a candidate seeking popular support; but had he remained on the Federal bench, does anyone believe he would have modified his views in this direction? Experience teaches us that the public official clothed with power and authority for life, secure from the wrath of an outraged public opinion, too often is inclined to lean further and further away from the people's side, until he finally becomes, by transition, not the people's servant, but their master.

I entertain all due respect for the Federal judiciary. I know that great and good men have adorned the Federal bench in the past, adorn it now, and will adorn it in the future, but I am not blind to the fact well known to every man that many men have been elevated to the Federal bench whose private lives and characters and whose public acts have been found reeking with iniquity. Let us not, therefore, open the door of opportunity for tyranny and oppression wider to any court, to any judge, to any officer, be he high or low. Let us rather, while we have the opportunity as we have now, throw around each and every citizen of our land those just safeguards which will stand between him and the oppressor's wrong as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night. [Applause.]

In my judgment this entire section could well be repealed and no citizen of the land suffer inconvenience or harm. The many other sections of the Federal criminal code appear to me to cover every known or conceivable offense against the legitimate rights of the public and individuals, and in addition to this each and every citizen of the land is well protected by just laws in this respect in every State and Territory of this Union. But as it seems to be the wish of those having charge of this bill to retain this section, then I believe it is our sacred duty to ourselves and to our country to make it so clear, so specific, and so definite in its terms that there will be no room for doubt or cavil as to its application.

This section of the statute, like several others, was enacted during reconstruction days for the avowed purpose of aiding a weak and helpless race who were just beginning to enjoy the privileges of citizenship. It has served its purpose, has outlived its usefulness, and its further continuation on our statute books will, I fear, be for a far different purpose. Instead of being used as a shield for a weak race in their struggle to enjoy the full benefits of life, liberty, and property, I very greatly fear that we who are now here sending it out with new life, molded into permanent form in the statute law of our nation, will live to see the day when it will be turned into a sword to strike down the weak and humble laboring man in his unequal strife with the agencies of greed and oppression. [Applause.]

We have another illustration of this same transition in the fourteenth amendment to our Federal Constitution. Adopted as it was for the purpose of firmly engrafting into our constitutional fabric the basic rights of the recently freed race, it served its purpose in that regard, but has recently been made the vehicle of carrying into Federal courts the settlement of almost every claim of corporations to be permitted to override State laws and local legislation enacted by the very power that gave the corporation life and being. Under this amendment to our Constitution we see the great railroad corporations rushing into the Federal courts and procuring injunctions against the enforcement of rate laws, antitrust laws, and many other wholesome laws enacted by the States for the people's protection. The only use now made of this amendment appears to be one entirely foreign to the minds of its framers and unthought of until years after its adoption. We have all seen many other laws, enacted by a lawmaking body in a certain period to meet a particular evil, serve their purpose and then become dormant, but after having lain dormant for many years they have been resurrected and brought to life and given application to new conditions unthought of at the time of their original adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I am heartily in favor of the principle contained in this amendment and the substitute. Lest, as has been suggested by many, the amendment be held unconstitutional, let us adopt the substitute. Let us put away as unworthy of consideration all question of beauty of form, of elegance of expression, and harmony contained in the original bill; let us commence here and now and amend this section so as to send an antidote with the poison; let us not delay to await some other opportunity, some more convenient season. We are called upon to revise, amend, codify, and reenact the criminal law. No time can be more opportune than now to put just limitations on this statute.

Mr. Chairman, I make no pretense of being the spokesman or the champion of organized labor, or of any other class, but I do feel and hope that every Member of this House will recognize it as his bounden duty to do justice toward every citizen of the land, be he high or low, and I do believe that justice can only be done by placing some proper limitation upon the broad terms of this section. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the committee upon this question is to oppose these amendments, without any discussion whatever as to their wisdom or desirability. We oppose them upon the ground that they result in the incorporation into existing law of substantially new features of legislation, altering existing law by adding subjects upon which Congress has not heretofore legislated. It is not the policy of this House to do it, and it was the policy of the committee to which this bill was submitted that no changes of that kind would be made, under those conditions.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Will you just permit me to finish stating what I have in my mind? If any argument were needed as to the propriety of that attitude of the committee, it seems to me the discussion upon the floor of this House would furnish that argument. Here various questions have arisen, referring to the validity of these provisions.

Many people feel that the addition of this amendment to this section would involve its constitutionality. I believe it. Many others believe that it is not at all germane to the section itself. Now, the only way in the world in which these subjects can properly be considered, in orderly legislation under the rules of this House, is to submit them to a committee and have that committee report to the House, and not in this wholesale manner, under the spur of excitement or of political feeling, attempt to alter an organic law of the land by the addition of a totally new subject.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Carrying out the suggestion which the gentleman has just made, would the gentleman accept now a motion to refer this section back to his committee, with instructions to report it at a later date, after having considered the objections made to it in its present form and such suggestions by way of amendment as Members of the House might submit?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No; I do not think that would be advisable. It would impair the symmetry of this great work which it is necessary for us to complete, because the gentleman must bear in mind something which he seems to forget, that we are engaged in a codification of existing law and not the enactment of new legislation upon every conceivable subject.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then the gentleman's position is not that objections to the measure should go to a committee for consideration and action, but that we must take the bill just as it stands.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That if new legislation is introduced it ought to go to the Judiciary Committee or some other committee, to be reported to the House as a new bill, upon the new subject of legislation.

Mr. COCKRAN. But the gentleman surely does not mean to suggest that the committee should at one and the same time pass a section and then call upon the Judiciary Committee to remedy its doubtful qualities.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Not at all. The gentleman utterly misunderstands me. I say the proposition here is a subject of new legislation, and, like every other new legislation, it ought to be regularly introduced and referred to a committee and the committee carefully consider it and report upon it.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me this question?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. What conceivable class of cases could this section apply to under existing conditions, except those labor controversies mentioned by the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Why, if the gentleman would look at the reported cases——

Mr. COCKRAN. Give us one concrete case.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will look at the reported cases he will find that it has been applied to almost every kind of case except that, and nobody ever dreamed or ever will dream that it is applicable to that kind of a case.

Mr. COCKRAN. Even assuming that to be the case, I would ask the gentleman this question: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri surely does not extend the scope of this section, but qualifies and limits it. Is not that so?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. No, I think it embraces a new subject, upon which we have not legislated; and while I have not had time really to consider it, I heard it read from the desk and I looked at it in the RECORD this morning sufficiently to be convinced of the fact that it was practically a new subject of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want to get this debate concluded, and I move that all further debate on this amendment and the section close in ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CURRIER). Will the gentleman allow the Chair to state the question? The gentleman from Pennsylvania moved that all debate on this section and the pending amendment shall be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I want to correct an impression under which the gentleman from Pennsylvania is laboring. The gentleman from New Jersey is not in order with this motion pending.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to modify his motion and confine it to these amendments. The gentleman's proposition would cut out my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it would not cut out the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, but it would cut out debate upon it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not want any debate, but I want a chance to state to the committee and the Members who were not here yesterday what the effect of the amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion prevails, the gentleman can not state that.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not want, Mr. Chairman, to prevent the gentleman from Missouri making that statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then I will offer the amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be read for the information of the House. The gentleman from Missouri sends up the amendment to be read for the information of the House, and without objection it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 19 by striking out all after the word "years," in line 18.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield to me for permission to correct a misapprehension that he is laboring under.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a motion, which is pending.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. But I ask him to permit me to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from New Jersey for that purpose?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I want to say that the gentleman from Pennsylvania stated that this amendment of mine was the one that was in the RECORD last night.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, I did not intend to say that. The gentleman misunderstood me. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the section and the amendments be closed in ten minutes, and that five shall be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri and five by myself.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman to permit me to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has renewed the motion that all debate on the section and the amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 103, noes 88.

Mr. COCKRAN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. COCKRAN.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 123, noes 96.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized to control five minutes.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri. I understand that we have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania can yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. MANN. I want it understood that the gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object to the yielding of time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] had five minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania had five minutes.

Mr. MANN. There was no order by the committee to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. That is where the recognition would naturally go, to the chairman of the committee and to the gentleman who offered the amendment.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] may have three minutes of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to that request?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the justice of the amendment I sent to the Clerk's desk and have had read will address itself to the understanding of every man here. It is to strike out all of this section after the word "years," in line 13, "and shall, moreover, be thereafter ineligible to any office or place of honor, profit, or trust created by the Constitution or laws of the United States."

Now, the first penalty is a fine of $5,000 and ten years in prison added. A judge might find somebody guilty of some transgression under this section and fine him $1 and send him to jail for twenty-four hours, and then this enormous penalty attaches, of disqualifying him for all time to come for any place of honor in the country. I say that all that it needs is to be stated.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not true as a matter of history that the thing which the gentleman desires to strike out, or the penalty put there, is a part of the reconstruction legislation?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is absolutely true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And is about the last relic of that sort left on the statute books?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am heartily in favor of the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, I believe I can say, on behalf of the committee, that it does not desire in any sense to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very glad of that. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I desire to address myself to my motion to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if no member of the committee desires to take the time. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] does not desire to take the time, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire only one minute. I desire also to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] for three minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it might as well be understood one time as another that in Committee of the Whole nobody has any time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Then I object. Gentlemen should be recognized in their own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I desire to yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that.

Mr. COCKRAN. May I have the floor in my own right?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can, if no member of the committee desires to use the time.

Mr. COCKRAN. Then I shall ask it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has been twice on his feet, and the Chair feels that he ought to recognize him first.

Mr. COCKRAN. Very well.

[Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say for the information of the committee that when this debate began I was rather inclined to sympathize with the position of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], but after his explanation it became perfectly clear that there is an absolute, pressing necessity for the adoption of just such an amendment as that which has been suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]. I venture to say now that the only class of cases that could possibly come under this section, and the class of cases that are intended to be reached by it, are labor disputes such as have been described by the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will take the trouble to read some of the decisions of the Supreme Court under this section, he will find it has been used in quite a number of other cases and has never been used in regard to that.

Mr. COCKRAN. Nobody pretends that any case arising from a labor dispute has ever been brought to trial under this section. It was passed, as everyone knows, to meet conditions created in the South by the Federal election laws passed after the civil war. Since these laws were wiped from the statute book this section has lain dormant. That is conceded by everyone. But it is equally true that the adoption of this section now and the rejection of these amendments will be accepted by the courts so surely as the development of our system of jurisprudence shall follow the path it has pursued for the last twenty-five years undeviatingly, as a reenactment of those provisions, and they will be held to include precisely this class of cases. There is no other class of cases in which anyone, on behalf of the Government or private interests, would seek to invoke such a provision of law. I am quite willing to admit that in this the gentleman from Kentucky and myself are both engaged in prophecy. I do not claim any power as a prophet. I am unwilling to concede that the gentleman from Kentucky is infallible in prophecy. We are both agreed in this, however, that while we have agreed to disagree on the interpretation which the courts will put on the section in this respect, we are united in the belief that this section should not be applied to labor cases. He says in terms that it can not and should not affect the class of cases which the gentleman from New Jersey seeks to exclude from its operation. I say that it can and that it will.

Many gentlemen here share my belief in this respect. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] believes it, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] believes it. Then, in heaven's name, what objection can there be to making the exclusion of these labor cases which we all favor so clear and distinct that no one can read any other meaning into this statute. The gentleman's objection is that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey would make the section too long. Well, after he has stricken out the part which is so glaringly objectionable that he does not venture to defend it now that its indefensible features have been pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCALL], whose susceptibility it has alarmed—when that language has been stricken out the whole section will not be so long, with the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey included, as it is now. So, conceding that in legislation as in wit brevity is the most admirable quality, this measure will by no means be impaired, but much improved in length and clearness through the adoption of this amendment.

On the gentleman's own statement it can do no harm. In the opinion of nearly everyone on this side, it is absolutely essential to a perversion of the law in operation from the significance which we here intend should attach to it.

It is said also that this is simply a codification of laws, and therefore no attempt should be made to change existing statutes, even by employing clearer terms to define their purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the history of revisions touches the operations of government in every State of this Union. There never has yet been a revision of law that was not found to have incorporated something new in its provisions. The objection which Mr. James C. Carter made to the proposed codification of the laws of New York, repeated through many years, in an address to the legislature, which is a classic upon the capacity of the common law to deal with every conceivable condition affecting men under civilized government, begins with the proposition that in the very nature of things it is impossible to codify without either enlarging or narrowing the scope of existing law in the process. [Applause.] And you are enlarging the scope of our laws here by revivifying an obsolete statute, and by that very fact extending it to an entirely new class of case. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Missouri rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I rise for the purpose of accepting the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 85, noes 101.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PRINCE. I would like to have the substitute read. We can not hear anything back here.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute.

The substitute was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] will act as tellers.

Mr. HEPBURN. A further parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is this a substitute for the text or for some other amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH].

The committee divided, and tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 119.

So the substitute was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 79, noes 116.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 85, noes 117.

So the amendment was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 19 by striking out all after the word "years" in line 13.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon the motion offered by the gentleman from Georgia, to strike out section 19.

The question was put.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 83, noes 109.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] will act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 112.

So the motion was lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I rise to make a motion. I move you, sir, that section 19 as amended be referred back to the committee for further consideration.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order against that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order against the motion. That motion would take the entire bill back to the committee, and the Chair does not think the Committee of the Whole can refer a bill back to the committee. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. If in the act of violating any provision of the preceding section, any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed. (R. S., s. 5509.)

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I have just submitted a motion to strike out the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the section just read.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to say a few words upon the motion.

The section is a short one, and anyone by reading can readily grasp what is in it. The provision is, in effect and in form, one to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts in reference to matters which should be cognizable solely, I think, in the State courts. And the fact that the provision of State law with reference to punishment is adopted as the measure for the Federal courts does not relieve the section of the objections that lie against it.

Now, in the first place, section 19, as to the offenses embraced within it, is so vague that it is utterly impossible, I think, for anybody to tell just what is meant. Certainly the boundary lines are too shadowy, too uncertain, for anybody to declare just what those offenses are, just what would be an offense within the provisions of this section 19 just passed. Now then, anything that may by construction be covered by that section is carried forward by implication into section 20; and under section 20, if in an attempt to do anything, forbidden or supposed to be forbidden, denounced or supposed to be denounced, in section 19, whatever it may be, another felony or misdemeanor be committed, then the Federal court, under section 20, is clothed with jurisdiction, and the poor saving of a measure of punishment according to the provisions of local law by no means mitigates the evil of invading the distinct, well-defined jurisdiction of the State.

As I said before, no man can say how small, how trivial, how insignificant a thing may really be embraced within this multitudinous and vague classification of section 19. Now, although the thing itself be not done, if in the attempt to do a thing which can not be defined here, because it is too vague and uncertain, another offense be committed, then the Federal court is to have jurisdiction of that incidental offense, committed in the attempt to do something else—anything which, in the judgment of the Federal court, may be a violation of section 19. No kind of harm can come from the striking out of this section, and much harm might result from retaining it. If the section be stricken out, then, by the concession of the section itself, provision for punishment is made in the several States, because you take from the State laws the penalty to be inflicted. The State law makes the penalty. The matter is provided for by State law, and it is severed from section 19, as it ought to be, because it probably is in effect and in fact distinct from anything covered by section 19. If the twentieth section be stricken out, every offense that could be reached by it would be left where it ought to be and where we have reason to suppose it is, except for section 20; that is to say, within the province of State law. The State would have jurisdiction uninterfered with, unimpeded, and uninterrupted by the exercise of jurisdiction by the Federal courts. I hope the section will be stricken out, because I am sure that it ought to be.

Mr. HACKNEY. I ask unanimous consent for leave to extend my remarks on the amendment to section 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on section 19. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee, I object to the proposition that section 20 be stricken out. It has had its application in quite a number of cases. It is quite apparent that many an act might be committed in pursuance of the conspiracy defined in section 19, a conspiracy to injure or intimidate any citizen in the free exercise of the rights guaranteed by the Constitution or the laws. Even murder might be committed.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. This section does not create any new offense. It simply prescribes a uniform penalty for offenses that may be committed in connection with these conspiracies, and the offenses are all defined in the law. Is not that all there is to it?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is exactly true. It simply enforces the law; that is, it adopts the law of the State as the measure of punishment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. As the penalty, that is all.

Mr. HOUSTON. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], I think he misinterprets the scope of this section. It does not create a new offense, but it does give the courts of the United States jurisdiction over an offense that they would have no jurisdiction of without that section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is impossible for this statute to give Federal jurisdiction over a State offense. That can not be done. You may undertake it, but you can not do it.

Mr. HOUSTON. It proposes that any felony committed in an attempt to commit the offenses prescribed in section 19 shall be punished as such in the Federal courts.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; but it must be an offense against a Federal statute.

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly it is an offense against a Federal statute, in that the Federal court is given jurisdiction of it by this section. The offense is against the laws of the United States if this section is to remain in, but with it stricken out there would be no offense save the ones defined in section 19.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Yes; very true, but this does not define any felony or misdemeanor. If they commit any other felony than the one defined in section 19, in the pursuance of the acts that are prohibited in section 19, we can not punish a State offense.

Mr. HOUSTON. It says the offender shall be punished with the same or such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Very true.

Mr. HOUSTON. That carries with it the jurisdiction of the Federal court to enforce it.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. But it must be a violation of a Federal statute.

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly it would be such by virtue of this section 20.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Well, we can not provide for the punishment of anything else.

Mr. HOUSTON. It would not be a violation of a Federal statute for a man to commit murder in the State of Maine; but if in the attempt to perpetrate an offense defined in section 19 he kills a man, then the Federal court would have jurisdiction to try him for such murder.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That follows right along with this matter, but that would be a definition of a crime under the statutes of the United States. I do not think he could be tried for murder, but for a conspiracy and murder in pursuance.

Unless the offense is an offense against the Federal statute, either under section 19, or some other section, the Federal court could not try him.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman will not contend that under existing law the Federal court could try a man for committing murder——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not unless it was an offense under the Federal statute.

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me put the gentleman a concrete case. Assume that under existing law a man while committing an offense as clearly against the Federal law as an attempt to violate the revenue law, killed another. Could he be tried for murder in the United States courts?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I would not say but that there could be concurrent jurisdiction.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman would not say that he could be tried in the United States court?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. My impression would be the other way.

Mr. COCKRAN. But under this section he could be sentenced for just such a crime.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Unless the offense is an interference with the Federal statute, a violation of the Federal statute, how are you going to punish him in the United States court?

Mr. COCKRAN. I am asking the gentleman to interpret a concrete case. He is going off with the facility which characterizes him on general principles, which he illuminates with his eloquence, but without answering my specific question. I am putting to the gentleman a concrete case. Suppose a man commits murder in attempting to violate a law as purely Federal as a revenue law, he would not be triable under existing law before a United States court, would he?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I should think not.

Mr. COCKRAN. But, if in an attempt to violate section 19 of that law he committed murder, he would be triable under this section 20, if it be adopted.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If it is a State offense, my impression is no.

Mr. MANN. If he should kill a revenue officer while the officer was in discharge of his duty, he would be dealt with under the Federal statute.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Of course it is not quite up to the gentleman from New York to propound conundrums and answer them himself.

Mr. COCKRAN. I have tried to get the gentleman from Maine to answer it, but he seems inclined to give me information which I have not sought rather than that for which I have begged.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. After the felicities which have characterized the debate thus far, I will give the gentleman this answer: I do not see how it is possible by this or any other statute for us to give jurisdiction to a Federal court of a State offense. I do not think we can impose a punishment for an offense not obnoxious to a Federal statute; and if a man committed murder and the circumstances were such that he was in the purview of a constitutionally enacted Federal statute, that would be triable as murder in the Federal court. That is as near as I can get to the gentleman's conundrum.

Mr. COCKRAN. With that introduction, will the gentleman answer the question that I have put to him?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment under the rule is exhausted.

Mr. COCKRAN. Under what rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes to a side.

Mr. COCKRAN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word to the paragraph.

Mr. COCKRAN. I merely want to renew my inquiry of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD].

Mr. MANN. Suppose the gentleman moves to amend the section in order to perfect it.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion has priority, I understand.

Mr. COCKRAN. Surely the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not mean to shut out the light which I am sure the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] will ultimately shed on this question?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In cooperation with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, mine is merely the hand that strikes the match. Yonder is the flame which will enlighten us.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Here is the illuminating process. [Laughter.]

Mr. COCKRAN. I want to ask the gentleman from Maine, conceding the general principle he has enunciated, suppose a man in violating section 19, which would be as purely an offense against the United States as a violation of the revenue law or attempting to pass a counterfeit Treasury bill, should kill another, would he be punishable under this section 20 for murder according to the penalty denounced against it by the laws of the State where the homicide occurred?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Not unless there was some statute of the United States——

Mr. COCKRAN. Well, but here is a statute of the United States.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Oh, does the gentleman insist on answering his own conundrum, or shall I?

Mr. COCKRAN. If I thought the gentleman would answer it, of course I should not interrupt him.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I may be infirm in reaching the conclusion the gentleman desires, but I will do the best that I can.

Mr. COCKRAN. Not infirm, but profuse. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. And diffuse—largely induced by the repetition of the conundrum, which is almost the same. I will say this, that he would not be triable in a Federal court and he would not violate a Federal statute unless it was a Federal statute applicable to that offense. That covers the whole ground.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will put a concrete case.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I can not tell you about that. I feel bound to say that I have not right here with me now, without referring to the books, all the statutes of the United States, and I can not do that.

Mr. COCKRAN. I asked the gentleman's judgment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman is giving his judgment from a legal standpoint and has given all that he can.

Mr. COCKRAN. Oh, if that be all the opinion that the gentleman will venture——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman has exhausted the fund of information on that subject, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman does himself faint justice. His information is much more extensive, I think, than his candor. [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman consults his imagination rather than his knowledge of the facts when he makes that suggestion.

Mr. COCKRAN. I do not claim to have full knowledge of the gentleman's resources. I only attempt to tap such of them as appear to be within my reach, and I believe they are practicably inexhaustible.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If that be true, I have absolutely exhausted the subject, so that covers the whole ground.

Mr. COCKRAN. Let me ask this question. Under existing laws if a murder were committed in an attempt to violate the United States laws, are there any circumstances under which the perpetrator could be punished for murder by the Federal courts?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think there is a statute.

Mr. MANN. This is the statute itself.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Section 19.

Mr. COCKRAN. I mean independent of this section.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I think there is a specific section.

Mr. COCKRAN. That would give the United States the right to punish a man for murder committed under such conditions?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Interfering with the enforcement of the revenue laws.

Mr. COCKRAN. A man could be tried for a capital offense?
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If there is not, there ought to be.
Mr. COCKRAN. But that is a totally different thing.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Sure.
Mr. COCKRAN. Under this section 20 there is no doubt whatever the United States Government would have the right to punish a man for murder committed in violating the preceding section.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. If there is a statute that would now make a man triable under those circumstances, this would apply, and if there is not, it would not apply.
Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman mean that under this section 20 if a man were in the act of violating the preceding section and committed murder the United States court would not have the right to inflict upon him the penalty denounced against murder by the State law?
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I mean to say that the words "felony" and "misdemeanor" do not cover any further Federal offense.
Mr. COCKRAN. That is all the gentleman undertakes to tell us.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is all I undertook to state in the beginning. We have landed just where we started in the beginning.
Mr. COCKRAN. Unfortunately. I was in hopes that I could get the gentleman a little further on the way to enlighten us and give an opinion as to the effect of this law in such a case as I suggested.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is the correct legal situation.
Mr. HARDY. I would like to make a suggestion. My reading of that statute seems to convey the idea that this statute reaches out and absorbs all the penal statutes of all the States of the United States and makes any act that may be committed in violation of section 19 also a violation of a law of the United States which is defined by the penal laws of the several States.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman have an idea that there is a degree of interlacing between the State and Federal legislation? We can enforce in the Federal courts a crime defined in a State court, and we can enforce in a State court a crime defined in a Federal court. Is that the gentleman's conception of the legislation? Let me say right here, if that is his conception it is not mine, and hence we disagree.
Mr. HARDY. Just one moment. I want to get the gentleman's ideas upon it. It says that if the offender shall commit an offense against the law of any State in the perpetration of this section 19, that then he shall be punished by the Federal authorities for the commission of that offense against State laws?
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; the section does not happen to make that statement.
Mr. HARDY. Now, let me read it, and I will see whether it does or not.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is, section 20 does not happen to read that way.
Mr. HARDY. I will read:

If in the act of violating any provision of the preceding section any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

I understand that to reach out when this act violative of section 19 is committed, if in the commission of it any offense against the State law is committed, this section No. 20 takes cognizance of that offense against the State law and imposes on the United States the penalty prescribed.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It would be absolutely unconstitutional, and legislation of that sort would be void. The court would wipe it from the statute books as with a sponge.
Mr. COCKRAN. That is what this says.
The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair). The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.
Mr. SHERLEY. I do not care to take much time of the committee. I only want to say that the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] seems correct. I do think the effect of this provision is to make the commission of any State offense in the pursuance of the conspiracy provided against in section 19 cognizable by the Federal court.
As to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] that such offense would be clearly unconstitutional, I am not quite so sure that that is accurate. I have some doubts as to the constitutionality of this section, but it might be upheld on the ground that, having gotten jurisdiction by virtue of the conspiracy, the incidents of it, which would include the commission of even a State offense, could be taken cognizance of by a Federal court; and that is seemingly the intention of the section, for the reason that section 20 refers to such punishment as is applied to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed. If the words "felony" and "misdemeanor" relate to any other Federal felony or misdemeanor there would be no need to refer to the State punishment, because, it being a Federal statute that was violated, that statute itself would fix the punishment. And so, in construing the reference to the punishment provided by the State, we are forced to the conclusion that they mean by that to take jurisdiction of offenses against State statutes. As to the constitutionality of that I am in doubt. As to the wisdom of it, I should like personally very much for the committee to express its view. Our committee did not feel at liberty to repeal this section, though it was discussed quite a good deal in the committee.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Does the gentleman think for a moment that any act in violation of a State statute that was not necessarily an interference with a Federal function would be within the scope of Federal power?
Mr. SHERLEY. I can not say just that; but when a court of the Federal Government got jurisdiction of a matter by virtue of a conspiracy punished by section 19 it would probably also get sufficient jurisdiction to take hold of offenses that might be committed in furtherance of that conspiracy. That is the theory on which this section is based.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Would they have jurisdiction without the offense were a Federal offense an interference with some Federal power?
Mr. SHERLEY. In this particular case it is where a man may not have committed a Federal offense per se; but a State offense is made a Federal offense, because it is made in pursuance of a Federal offense.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Is it not further a constitutional question as to whether it is an interference with Federal power?
Mr. SHERLEY. Not necessarily. I think the gentleman may by right; but I suggest as a matter for some thought my proposition. The court gets the original jurisdiction properly by virtue of the conspiracy section, and then it gets further judisdiction for the purpose of punishing the additional offense.
Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The conspiracy must be the substantive offense, and the additional offense a matter of aggravation for the purpose of affecting the penalty.
Mr. SHERLEY. I wanted to call the attention of the committee so as to show that it did undertake to give jurisdiction to what otherwise might be simply a State offense.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired, and debate on the pro forma amendment is exhausted.
Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last two words.
Mr. Chairman, this section was originally enacted in 1870 for the purpose of enforcing the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. It is part of the reconstruction legislation, which might well have been left out if the committee had been at liberty to leave out part of the law when it was only endeavoring to codify the law. The particular part of the original section which this section was intended to sustain was a provision to prevent hindering or controlling another from exercising or in exercising the right of sufferage under the fifteenth amendment, and went to the extent of prohibiting in the original section a refusal to lease property or to make a contract for labor. So that the original section, to which this was really an addenda, having been repealed, as I take it, in the repel of certain reconstruction acts—while I shall vote with the committee—I wish that the committee would say to the House that this provision of law no longer has any life, no longer is invoked by the court. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And there is no reason now, when one amendment has been adopted, why another amendment should not be adopted, and this antiquated, out-of-date endeavor to control elections in the States might well be wiped off the statute books. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.
The CHAIRMAN. That is not necessary. There is a pro forma amendment pending, and the gentleman can speak of that.
Mr. FLOYD. If I understand the meaning of this section, Mr. Chairman, it is not to give the Federal court jurisdiction of offenses committed in a State; if it did, the gentleman from Maine would be right in his contention. The main proposition is this: If two or more persons enter into any conspiracy to commit any offense against the Constitution or laws of the United States—for instance, to interfere with the right of franchise—and in the perpetration of this offense they violate any other law—for instance, commit murder—then this provides that, instead of fixing the punishment provided in the preceding section for this offense, the Federal court may fix the punishment prescribed by the State for murder, and, in that case, hang or imprison the man for this class of offense.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Does the gentleman mean by that that the United States take away from that State the right to try that man for murder, provided it was a crime upon that State?

Mr. FLOYD. No, sir. It only provides by substitution the punishment prescribed for murder in the State as the penalty for conspiracy under section 19—undertaking to say because the crime was committed under this conspiracy that they should fix the same punishment as is prescribed by the law of that State. In such cases wherein murder resulted it would be for murder, and the penalty for that would be imprisonment or the death penalty; that is what it means. [Applause.]

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the gentleman just answered the question that I wanted to suggest—that is, if I caught the idea aright, and it seems to me that it is the right one—that this statute means that if two or more persons were committing the felony mentioned in section 19 and they committed an offense which was made a crime by the laws of the State, that upon the trial in the United States court, having been found guilty——

Mr. FLOYD. Having been found guilty of the conspiracy——

Mr. NORRIS. Of the conspiracy in section 19, they should be given the punishment——

Mr. FLOYD. They should be given the punishment provided by the State for the crime.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the point.

Mr. FLOYD. Yes, and that ought to convince every Member of this House that the section is entirely wrong and ought to be stricken out.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. In that event the section does not create any new affirmative offense, on this theory.

Mr. COCKRAN. The object of the jurisdiction is the penalty. If they get the jurisdiction they may impose the penalty.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have just been handed a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing on this section. I was not myself familiar with it when I answered the gentleman from Maine. The Supreme Court upholds its constitutionality. I have not had the opportunity to read the case so as to see just what construction the courts put upon it, but the case is found in 178 United States, page 458.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Will you read the headnote?

Mr. SHERLEY. It is quite long.

Mr. FLOYD. I will not yield any further. Gentlemen are taking up my time. My objection is this, that if Congress undertook by the enactment of that law to give jurisdiction to try an offense committed in the State, it would be beyond its jurisdiction and the act would be unconstitutional; but I insist that the act is not unconstitutional in its clear meaning, and I am trying to make my meaning clear. I may repeat, the proposition is this, as laid down in the provision, if in the perpetration of the conspiracy described in section 19—to illustrate, say it is a conspiracy to interfere with the ballot, to intimidate voters, or to keep them away from the polls—if in their effort to do that they resort to murder and a man is killed, it does not give the Federal courts any jurisdiction over the murder, but it provides that if they are convicted of that conspiracy in which it is shown to the court that murder resulted, if the State in which the offense occurred prescribes the death penalty for murder, the Federal court may prescribe the death penalty for this conspiracy; and it can not mean anything else if it is constitutional.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Your idea is this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. FLOYD. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. What do the words "any other felony" mean?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Your idea is that the words——

Mr. FLOYD. I will answer the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and I think that will answer the inquiry which the gentleman from Maine has in mind. Let us notice the wording of the section:

> If in the act of violating any provision of the preceding section, any other felony or misdemeanor be committed, the offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is perfectly apparent that "the same" means this offense.

Mr. FLOYD (reading)—

> The offender shall be punished for the same with such punishment as is attached to such felony or misdemeanor by the laws of the State in which the offense is committed.

It means the conspiracy, the offense with which he is charged. If it means anything else it is unconstitutional.

Mr. MACON. There is no such thing as a misdemeanor under section 19 at all. It is a felony.

Mr. GARRETT. It says:

> Any other felony or misdemeanor.

I should like to have those words explained.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman mean that if a man is charged with conspiracy to commit one offense, and in the commission of that offense a murder is committed, that that gives the power to the court to impose the punishment for murder under the conviction for conspiracy?

Mr. FLOYD. That is what it says. It means that or else it is unconstitutional. If it is unconstitutional it ought to be stricken out, and if it means what I have shown, then it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The language is perfectly clear, that he shall "be punished for the same."

Mr. FLOYD. What does it mean?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. It is perfectly apparent on its language, and the court has held that to be constitutional. I can not speak authoritatively of the details of the case, because I have not examined it, but it has been held constitutional upon the ground that the court having obtained jurisdiction of the original offense, to wit, conspiracy to deprive a man of his rights guaranteed under the Constitution or under the laws of Congress, having obtained jurisdiction of the offense by virtue of section 19, it can retain jurisdiction for the punishment of any other misdemeanor or felony that may be committed in carrying that out.

Mr. FLOYD. I will ask the gentleman to answer this question: If the violation of the law by the commission of any other felony or misdemeanor referred to means a Federal offense, does not the Federal law prescribe a punishment for all of these offenses, and why does it say that the same punishment prescribed by the State shall be imposed?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not say that it means a Federal offense; I think it is an offense denounced by the State law.

Mr. FLOYD. If it attempts to confer jurisdiction upon a Federal court for crimes committed in the State it must fail. But it seeks to enforce the rights of citizens against the violation of laws of the United States and the Constitution of the United States, and section 19 fixes the penalty for this violation. Section 20 simply provides, as I understand it, and I will rest with this explanation, that if in the commission of the offense mentioned in section 19, murder, felony, or any misdemeanor grows out of it, the parties charged with conspiracy under section 19 are arraigned in the Federal court for trial and convicted and it appears to the court in the facts developed that another heinous crime has been committed, the Federal authorities are authorized to fix the punishment for this conspiracy prescribed by the State law for the punishment of those crimes, either felonies or misdemeanors, committed within the State as a result of the conspiracy.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas mean to say that on a trial for conspiracy where murder has been committed, the parties having been convicted will be punished for murder?

Mr. FLOYD. That is what the law says.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is really what did happen. There was an indictment growing out of the fact that a conspiracy was had against an informer against the violation of the revenue law, and the conspiracy resulted in the murder of the informer. The men were indicted under sections 5508 and 5509, and the court upheld the constitutionality of those sections and the men were punished by imprisonment for life for murder.

Mr. COCKRAN. Was he convicted of conspiracy or convicted of murder?

Mr. SHERLEY. He was practically tried for both and convicted of both—conspiracy and murder.

Mr. COCKRAN. Not under one indictment?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I have the case here, and I will state what the indictment was for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Arkansas be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. I will read what the offense was. The first count in the indictment charged in substance that on the 14th day of March, 1898, within the jurisdiction of the court, the persons above named conspired to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate one W. A. Thompson. The third count differs from the first only in charging a conspiracy formed by the same persons conspiring to injure, oppress, threaten, and intimidate. There are seven counts in the indictment, but the first and third are sufficient to show the nature of the charges against defendants and to bring out the questions disposed of by the opinion.

Mr. COCKRAN. They were not indicted for murder?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No, for conspiracy.

Mr. COCKRAN. But they were sentenced for murder?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. They were sentenced for murder or its equivalent.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is it. In other words, the penalty for murder was inflicted on a conviction for conspiracy?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. That is how I understand the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is what we have contended all along.

Mr. FLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have not had the opportunity to examine the decisions upon this question, and it seems that other gentlemen have had limitations also in their examination, for they are not very clear upon the subject. My proposition is that this section is to enable the Federal court to prescribe the exact punishment for conspiracy committed under section 19, not only to impose the punishment prescribed by the Federal statute, but, in addition thereto, if they see proper, to impose the punishment prescribed by the State for the offense committed.

Mr. COCKRAN. And that without trial.

Mr. FLOYD. And that without further trial than for conspiracy, if it develops that the other crime was committed as a result thereof. There is no other construction that will make the section constitutional. If it is not constitutional it ought to be eliminated. I think for safety it ought to be eliminated, and the motion to strike out section 20 ought to be adopted.

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the committee for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, in a State where there are no provisions for punishment for a particular misdemeanor or felony, so called, this statute—section 20—as a Federal statute would be wholly inoperative. In a State where there are such provisions it is wholly unnecessary. I think there is no escape from either conclusion. There is no independent penalty provided. If there is no penalty provided in this law, except by borrowing the penalty from the State law, then in any State where there is no penalty for a particular offense there are no means at the hands of the Federal court of inflicting any punishment whatever under section 20; and in a State where punishment is provided by the State law for the specific offense there is no need for this provision. Confusion, at the least, would result from it. The question might arise as to whether the State courts were ousted of jurisdiction. If not, there would be a putting of jurisdiction in both Federal and State courts.

But it is suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] that in the trial of a case under section 19 punishment might be inflicted under section 20, where a misdemeanor or felony had been committed in the attempt to do some of the things forbidden by section 19. That is not all of it. Under section 20 there might be indictment and trial in the Federal court for the commission of the offense provided for in section 20, borrowing the penalty from the State law, without any connection, except a mere argumentative one with section 19 or any offense denounced in it.

Another thing will be noticed. We are now in chapter 3, the title of which is "Offenses against the elective franchise and civil rights of citizens." Everybody knows that originally this legislation had reference to election and racial matters. The distinct purpose now of keeping it here, of keeping these provisions in the law, is to make the law effective against labor organizations and in labor disputes. When we vote to strike out this section, or vote to keep it in, let there be no doubt here or elsewhere as to what we vote for or what we vote against. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. I desire to call attention to the fact that this section punishes for a violation of State law; and I call attention to it because, as a lawyer, I have had experience in the identical case where parties were indicted under section 5508 for conspiracy and convicted and sentenced for murder, because in the conspiracy it was alleged, and the jury so found, that a murder was committed, and they were punished as provided in this section 20. Parties were charged under the Federal law with conspiracy, and the jury found that murder had been committed in carrying out the conspiracy, and the jury recommended the defendants to be imprisoned for life, and they were sentenced by the Federal judge to imprisonment for life, as provided by the Georgia statute.

Now, if you will attend to the reading of this section, you will see that it means nothing more or less than to add an additional penalty to the crime denominated "conspiracy" in section 19; because if the party charged with conspiracy had in the carrying of it out committed the offense of murder or any felony cognizable under the laws of the United States it would not be necessary—I mean by that over which the courts of the United States had jurisdiction—it would not be necessary to say he should be punished under the law prescribed by the State, because if it was a felony or misdemeanor denounced by the laws of the United States for the violation of which Congress had a right to prescribe a penalty, then there would be no necessity to say that he should be punished for such felony or misdemeanor as prescribed by the laws of the State for the offense committed. It can mean but one thing, and that is this, that if in the pursuit and carrying out of the conspiracy the party charged with that conspiracy shall commit a violation of the law, shall commit murder or assault with intent to murder, or burglary, or riot, as these crimes may be defined by the laws of the several States wherein the offense is committed, then the defendant shall be punished by the judge of the United States courts who tries the case, in the same way as if it had been tried in his court for a violation of the State law.

It means nothing else except that this offense was deemed not to be sufficiently punished when they prescribed the penalty for conspiracy, and it was the purpose of the law when it was enacted to take away from the State the right to try parties and to transfer that jurisdiction to the Federal court, because both of these sections, 5508 and 5509, being also sections 19 and 20 of this bill, originated after the end of the civil war, not for the purpose of being generally applied, but for the purpose of being applied specially to one section of this Union.

I desire to reply to the case referred to by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] who said that in the case referred to by them in 178 United States, of Motes, the Supreme Court had decided that both these sections were constitutional. I take issue with the gentlemen and want to refute that statement, and in order to do so will read, on page 462, the language of Judge Harlan, who announced that decision, wherein he said:

No question has been made—

And the judge parenthetically gave utterance to an obiter when he said—and, indeed, none could be successfully made, as to the constitutionality of these statutory provisions.

And an investigation of the case will disclose that it was tried and decided on entirely different questions than the constitutionality of either or of both these sections. As this is the only case that any gentleman has cited to sustain the constitutionality of these sections, I apprehend that no other can be found. Yet the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] stated that in the case referred to in 178 United States Report the court had decided both these sections to be constitutional. That statement is inaccurate, for, I repeat, the judge who announced the decision of the court in that case says, "No question has been made—indeed, none could successfully be made—as to the constitutionality of these statutory provisions." Hence the question was not made in that case, and it does not sustain the contention of these gentlemen.

I close this argument in support of the motion to strike out this section by repeating what I said yesterday, when I moved to strike out section 19 of this bill, which is but the codification of section 5508 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; that in my opinion this section, if tested by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States as contained in the reported cases of the United States v. Cruikshanks (92 U. S., 542), of United States v. Ruse (92 U. S., 214), in the civil rights cases (109 U. S.), Harris v. United States (106 U. S.), which I have here before me, and a number of others that could be cited, is clearly unconstitutional and should not be codified as a part of the criminal laws of this Government. Let me call the attention of this committee to what Chief Justice Waite said in delivering the opinion of the court in the case of Cruikshanks (92 U. S.). Said the Chief Justice:

It is no more the duty or within the power of the United States to punish for a conspiracy to falsely imprison or murder, within a State, than it would be to punish for false imprisonment or murder itself.

This was the decision of the Chief Justice, rendered in 1875 soon after this law was enacted; and from that day to this the Supreme Court of the United States have adhered to it—at least they have not reversed it. These sections should no longer cumber our statute books. I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] will prevail. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last six words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last six words.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this debate upon this section illustrates the folly of the House in Committee of the Whole trying to amend laws which have endured the test of time. Now, it has been almost impossible to hear during the confusion of the House what the views are of the various lawyers who have addressed themselves to this subject. We have here a law that has been upon the statute books for thirty years or more. Up to this afternoon nobody has been making any complaint against this particular section except moonshiners who have committed the crime of murder, or those who have committed heinous crimes while attempting to violate or to render null through fraud the land laws of the country, or, as in the old times, when men were indicted for murder while violating the election laws and the amendments relating to that subject. The latter part has fallen into innocuous desuetude. We have repealed most of those laws, so that nobody is complaining in any part of the country against this section of that statute on account of the election laws.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it often follows in some localities in this country that where there is a conspiracy for moonshining and resisting the officers in the collection of the revenues of the country a murder happens to be committed by the people who have conspired—perhaps not their original intention, and yet sometimes perhaps it was their original intention—it has been found impossible in the State courts to convict them of the crime of murder and punish them accordingly. And under these statutes the case has gone into the United States courts; and in the only case which has been cited under these statutes, where the men were indicted for conspiracy under the nineteenth section and also for committing murder in pursuance of that conspiracy and were convicted before a jury in the Federal courts of the commission of this murder, they were punished for that crime by imprisonment for life, which happened to be the law regulating punishment for murder in the State of Alabama, where this crime occurred.

Now, the House is asked, without full examination, and only the examination that is made here in Committee of the Whole, amidst all this confusion, to strike this section out and to render it null so far as the execution of the law is concerned in some States and in some localities in some States, where it is popular, by the practice of moonshining, to evade the revenue law. And all that those conspirators would have to do, it would seem, in case they should commit murder in carrying on their nefarious schemes, would be to have the indictment found and prosecuted in the State courts, and the Government could not get justice, because of the popular feeling. In United States courts convictions have been had.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. We are asked here to repeal this section without knowing the effect of it, here in the Committee of the Whole, without having time to examine into it. If any gentleman desires to have it repealed let him in an orderly way present a bill and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, composed of able lawyers of this House.

Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. COCKRAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has had a good deal to say in this discussion, and I hope he will not take up my time now.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND]?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not yield. In an orderly way, I say, present this matter and have it go to the Committee on the Judiciary. Let them examine into it and see if there is any complaint and any hardship about the working of this law or any incongruity in the statute. Let us go on with this business of simply codifying the penal laws of the United States and leave this as it is, without getting hot-headed and without giving the matter due consideration, without giving a fair expression of the judgment of the House upon the subject, and without having any report from any committee that has looked into it at their leisure and examined the decisions and the working of the law. Let us go on with this bill, and instead of striving to amend or strike out every section, following some whim or caprice of the members of the committee to cut it out of the statute, without giving it calm deliberation and the considerate judgment of this House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask some questions, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman wants us to expedite business by going on considering this bill, because, as he alleges, we have not time to properly consider each section. Now, has it not just developed with reference to this section 20 that there was a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States bearing on it directly, which the committee has not considered, if I understood the gentleman? If I am wrong, I am willing to be corrected.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me. He must realize that no committee or any set of men could possibly undertake to come upon this floor fortified by all of the decisions that have been made on all the criminal laws of the United States, but on any section wherein we have brought in a change of existing law we will be prepared to defend the change that is made.

Mr. SIMS. I meant no reflection on the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have made none.

Mr. SIMS. I see the great work the committee has had to do, and yet with the long time the committee have had to consider this measure it has not read and studied and presented here all the important decisions of the courts bearing on this bill. Now, we are asked to pass this bill, which is equivalent to a reenactment of every one of these sections anew, without considering it section by section. It is equivalent to reenacting all these laws. They will be treated as enacted from this hour, and the "innocuous desuetude" referred to by some gentlemen as applying to some of these sections will be wiped out by the action of this Congress.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said he wanted a certain section out, and so do we all. But are we compelled to so follow the committee that we must reenact all these statutes simply out of compliment to the committee? The gentlemen of the committee themselves state it is impossible to present every decision of the courts bearing on these various statutes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it desirable that the penal code shall be codified so that the law on penal matters will be accessible to the people and to the lawyers of the country?

Mr. SIMS. I believe it is a good idea as a matter of convenience.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman believe that if we started in to amend section after section of this bill—does he not know—that it would never be enacted into law?

Mr. SIMS. Then why did the gentleman say a while ago that he would strike out a portion of it and now say he refuses to do this because it is a portion of the bill as reported?

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman bring in a bill striking it out and bring it before the House, and I will vote for it, but I will say to the gentleman that I am interested to have the law of the country in such shape——

Mr. SIMS. Do not take all my time.

Mr. MANN. I will not take any more of it.

Mr. SIMS. Go on.

Mr. MANN. I just got the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. SIMS. I know it is an easy matter to say bring in a bill and have it brought before the House. That is trite.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on the District of Columbia brings in more bills that they do not know about than any other committee.

Mr. SIMS. If bills have been so reported by that committee that the House could not accept them, that is no reason why we should accept this measure without due consideration. The District Committee has brought in many bills that were not considered as fully as they might have been, and no Member has done more than the gentleman from Illinois to prevent the passage of those bills.

Mr. MANN. Except the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. I take my part of the lashing.

Mr. MANN. I know you always do your share of the work.

Mr. SIMS. We have the acknowledgment of the gentleman from Kentucky that it is impossible for the committee in presenting their report to bring in all the decisions that relate to the different sections covered in the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. What "the gentleman from Kentucky" said was this, and it is apparent to any man who will think a moment about the work, that no set of men could undertake to bring in a codification of the criminal laws of America and be prepared to answer as to all the decisions that had been made as to this and every section, but when we brought in a change of existing law we would be prepared and should be prepared to defend the change we recommend. But when we simply presented to the House the existing law, it certainly is not fair to us to expect that we should be prepared to present in the Committee of the Whole every decision that has been had on existing law, and our failure to do so was the criticism made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to address the committee for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has tried to put me in the attitude of criticising him and his committee. I deny it. It appeared that gentlemen here had not read this decision. It is an important decision, bearing on a section of this bill. I am not blaming the gentleman from Kentucky for not having read it. I say it is impossible for him to have read everything bearing on all the sections of this bill, but if the House discovers something that ought to be done which this august committee has not done, are we to be absolutely estopped from doing that which the committee has been unable to do?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but what has the House discovered? It has discovered that the decision that was read here on the floor in 178 United States upheld the constitutionality of this act, after we had had thirty minutes' talk about its unconstitutionality. Now, does that not prove that this Committee of the Whole had better leave existing law as it is than to change it without themselves having read all the decisions? [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this is equivalent to reenacting it. It is revitalizing it; it is indorsing and approving anew this old provision. I say that is the moral as well as the legal effect of it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Don't you know that if this bill was to die to-day, these sections 5508 and 5509 of the Revised Statutes would be as much the law as if they were reenacted?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, of course they would, but when sections of the law have fallen into "innocuous desuetude," as these have, they should remain where they are, but now we are asked to reenact, revitalize, and reindorse that law which has been ignored and has fallen out of use.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman knows that these decisions have been rendered within the last twenty years.

Mr. SIMS. I can not convince the gentleman from Kentucky that I know anything about this matter. What I am trying to do is to convince the House that it ought to take sufficient time to find out something about this bill. I was replying to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who has always heretofore been able to take care of himself and his side of the House; but the gentleman from Kentucky comes to his defense. The gentleman from New York was lecturing the House—I think a great deal of the gentleman, and he always smiles when he lectures us—he was chiding us for blocking business. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] rushes to his defense, under the assumption that he and his committee are being criticised by myself, when I have not thought of it, but have simply asked that we strike out a section in the bill that we do not want; and I do not feel that we should be estopped from making such motions simply because it is a codification bill and reported unanimously.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I move that all debate on this section——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from South Carolina for five minutes.

Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out section 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that that motion is pending.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. To what is the gentleman from South Carolina addressing himself?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is addressing himself to a pro forma amendment, and proceeding under unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman is proceeding under unanimous consent, I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to have a chance to make a motion to close debate when the gentleman has finished. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from South Carolina, who was proceeding in his own time. At the expiration of his five minutes the Chair will recognize the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman proceeding by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. In this particular instance the gentleman is proceeding in his own time, but the Chair thinks the debate is running by unanimous consent.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reasons advanced as to why no changes should be made in this proposed codification do not strike me with any force. There are many provisions of law on the statute books of the United States that ought to be changed or ought to be repealed. Now, when Congress is asked to reenact, so to speak, the statutes that are objectionable or unwise, I see no objection to striking out or amending any such sections. The work of the committee, no doubt, is well done. I can understand that the committee took the scope of their work to be codification and not to amend by striking out existing law in the proposed codification. There is no question about that. I think the arguments advanced are not conclusive. I think the argument advanced by the gentleman from New York, where he cites crimes against the excise law—moonshine liquor cases—are not conclusive. They are not tried under section 20 and section 19. These two sections are political in their scope. As I understand it, generally speaking, a man can only be prosecuted under these two sections where he has committed some act of conspiracy and by which act he interferes with the political rights guaranteed to a citizen of the United States by the Constitution.

There is a serious objection to section 20 in that the punishment is cumulative. In addition to the punishment provided in section 19 for conspiracy, it provides that the punishment provided in the State statutes may be inflicted. As has been so well said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], if there is no State statute, then section 19 means nothing. If there is a State statute against murder, assault and battery, or anything of that sort, then that punishment is added. So that the punishment provided in section 20 is cumulative.

I think, however, it is open to another serious doubt at least. We all know that for violation of the revenue laws a man, for instance, selling whisky may be prosecuted in the State court. That does not bar a prosecution in the Federal court. So that, carrying that illustration into the consideration of this statute, a man can be prosecuted for a murder committed where there is a conspiracy. Now, I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill, does he think that for the murder so committed under these circumstances and a trial had in the State court and the party found not guilty, he could be afterwards tried in the Federal courts on a charge of conspiracy and where murder was proved he could be found guilty?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. My judgment is it would bar a prosecution for murder. Conspiracy is a separate and distinct offense.

Mr. FINLEY. Then the gentleman admits that if there was a prosecution for murder in a State court where there was a conspiracy and the defendant was found not guilty, this would be a bar to prosecution in the Federal courts. In my judgment section 20 does not bear out the gentleman's contention. The section should be stricken out, and I will so vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that all debate on this question be closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendments will be withdrawn. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] to strike out section 20.

The question was taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is in doubt, and will order a division.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 78, noes 83.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania.

The House again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 87, noes 93.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11701) for the codification of the criminal law and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

INTERSTATE RAILWAY RATES.

Mr. BROWN presented a letter from the secretary of the Nebraska State railway commission, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEBRASKA STATE RAILWAY COMMISSION,
Lincoln, January 9, 1908.

Hon. NORRIS BROWN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am requested by the commission to call to your attention a bill recently introduced in the Senate by Hon. C. W. FULTON, United States Senator from Oregon, which is designed to amend the interstate-commerce act so that no increase in an interstate rate, or discontinuance of a rate which thereby causes an increased rate, will be permitted without an opportunity to protest being afforded, to the end that a hearing and determination of its reasonableness may be had before it becomes effective. A resolution favoring such an amendment was adopted with but one dissenting vote by the National Association of Railway Commissioners at its nineteenth annual session, held in Washington, D. C., October 10 to 13, 1907.

Broader powers must be given the Interstate Commerce Commission in the matter of rate regulation before it can reach that state of efficiency which the people demand and which is necessary for their protection. Under the law as it now stands a rate becomes effective thirty days after filing with the Commission, regardless of how unjust it may be or how many people may protest against it, and remains in force until after complaint has been made, formal hearing held, and determination reached. The only way in which the collection of an excessive rate can be avoided, in a case of this kind, is by an appeal to the courts for an order enjoining the enforcement of such rate until after hearing before the Commission, all of which is annoying, expensive, and difficult, if not impossible, in a great many instances.

Under the Nebraska law no change in rates can be made until after application has been made to the Commission and authority granted for that purpose, and experience has convinced us that this is a wise provision. It may be impractical to require the same procedure with reference to the thousands of changes filed monthly with the Interstate Commission, but we believe the precautions proposed by Senator FULTON'S bill are not unreasonable, and therefore respectfully request you to use your influence and vote in support of its passage.

Very truly, yours,

NEBRASKA STATE RAILWAY COMMISSION,
CLARK PERKINS, Secretary.

ESTATE OF AARON VAN CAMP, DECEASED.

Mr. McCUMBER. I present a paper from the Washington Loan and Trust Company, of Washington, D. C., relative to the estate of Aaron Van Camp, deceased. I move that the paper be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 902) authorizing certain extensions to be made in the lines of the City and Suburban Railway of Washington, the Washington Railway and Electric Company, the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, and the Capital Traction Company, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon.

I desire to give notice that at the earliest possible opportunity I shall call up this bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 29) to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 37) to transfer jurisdiction of the Washington Aqueduct, the filtration plant and appurtenances to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 2295) to extend the time within which the Washington and Western Maryland Railroad Company shall be required to complete the road of said company, under the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, as amended by an act of Congress approved June 28, 1906.

Mr. GAMBLE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2028) to amend section 605 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to corporations, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 158) for the establishment of a park at the junction of Maryland avenue, Fifteenth street, and H street, NE., Washington, D. C.; and

A bill (S. 33) to provide a public park on Georgetown Heights, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1476) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to accept donations of money and land for the establishment of a branch library in the District of Columbia, to establish a commission to supervise the erection of a branch library building in said District, and to provide for the suitable maintenance of said branch, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOPKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1576) for permanent consular improvement and commercial enlargement, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, which was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 903) to amend section 2, chapter 433, Thirtieth Statutes at Large, entitled "An act to confirm title to lots 13 and 14 in square 959 in Washington, D. C.," reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 251) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the city of St. Louis, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River," approved February 6, 1907, reported it without amendment.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER BRIDGE, ARKANSAS.

Mr. MARTIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 194) to authorize the county of St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across St. Francis River at or near the town of Madison, in said county and State, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of St. Francis, one of the counties of the State of Arkansas, duly created and organized under the laws of said State, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Francis River at or near the town of Madison, in said county and State, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I gave notice the other day that I would object to taking up bills on the day when they come from committees. This is a purely local bill, and one that no one could object to, and therefore I do not desire to enforce the rule against its consideration to-day.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF STATISTICAL MATTER.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 7th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 5,000 copies of the "Statistical Record of the Progress of the United States, 1800–1907, and Commercial and Financial Statistics of Foreign Countries." (From Statistical Abstract of the United States.)

PERMITS TO RETAIL LIQUOR DEALERS.

Mr. ALDRICH. The resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, December 17, 1907, which was agreed to, directed the Committee on Finance to consider the question of Government permits to retail liquor dealers where local option prevails. It is the desire of the Committee on Finance that the Judiciary Committee shall consider the question; and I therefore move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, in order that the subject may be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the resolution be amended by substituting "Judiciary" for "Finance."

The motion was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider and report whether it is practicable for the National Government to discontinue the issuing of permits to retail liquor dealers in States or counties and municipalities where local option prevails prohibiting the sale of liquors.

ELIZABETH UNDERWOOD.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. WHYTE on the 9th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Elizabeth Underwood, widow of Stephen Underwood, late a laborer in the engineer's department of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FINANCIAL STATISTICS.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, several weeks ago the Committee on Finance of the Senate reported a resolution of inquiry, directed to the Secretary of the Treasury, and I should be glad to know of the Chair if there has yet been submitted an answer to that resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What was the date of the resolution?

Mr. CULBERSON. It was passed preceding the holidays, but I do not remember the exact date. It is a resolution reported by the Committee on Finance. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] seems to have a copy of the resolution. Will he kindly give the date of it?

Mr. TILLMAN. It was reported from the Committee on Finance by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on the 12th day of December, and is Senate resolution No. 33.

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not hear the first part of the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply stated that a resolution had been adopted by the Senate, and inquired if there had been an answer to it sent to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands there has been no answer to the resolution to which the Senator from Texas refers.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will say for the information of the Senator from Texas that I called at the Treasury Department this morning, as I was extremely anxious to have the information called for by the resolution. I found that the Secretary of the Treasury was away, but the Acting Secretary assured me that a response to the resolution would be here on Wednesday morning. The Secretary of the Treasury has been ill at his house and has been delayed in preparing the part of the answer to the resolution which requires some explanation to be made by him.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if the law does not require the Secretary of the Treasury to make an annual report on the 1st day of January, giving such facts as are called for by the resolution?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the first part of the information called for by the resolution of the Senate, with reference to the kind of securities which are received for public deposits, which the Secretary is obliged to make public——

Mr. CLAY. Would the Secretary not be required to make public the amount of the deposits and show where the money is deposited and the amount deposited in each bank?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think not; not by the law. He is required to make public before the 1st of January a description of the securities which have been received to secure public deposits. There is no provision of law as to how they are to be made public; but I have no doubt, as they were asked for by the Senate, they will be included in the communication which the Secretary will send to the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I thought the act we passed required the Secretary of the Treasury annually on the 1st day of January to make a report.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before the 1st of January.

Mr. CLAY. Before the 1st of January to make a report, showing how much money was deposited, where the money was deposited, and the kind of securities that were received for the safe-keeping of the money. I may be mistaken, but I think I am correct.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is mistaken as to the first part of his statement, but not as to the last. I am assured, however, that the information asked for by the Senate will be communicated to the Senate on Wednesday morning.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I will read the provision of the law to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] has referred. It is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary shall, on or before the 1st of January of each year, make a public statement of the securities required during that year for such deposits.

Speaking for myself, like the Senator from Georgia, I have not seen any published statement of that so far, and we are now in the middle of the month. Can the Senator from Rhode Island inform us if there has been any publication of that kind?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not advised as to that particular subject. I have no information on that point.

Mr. CLAY. What is the date of the act from which the Senator from Texas read?

Mr. CULBERSON. It is from the act of March 4, 1907.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senate dispose of the two resolutions which I offered on December 9th last and which went to the Calendar—Senate resolutions 26 and 27. They relate to the matter of the issuance of the 3 per cent certificates of indebtedness and of the Panama bonds. I suppose that it will be best to let those resolutions go to the Committee on Finance without undertaking to vote on them, as undoubtedly the Senator from Rhode Island will object to them. Therefore I ask that these two resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance. I should like to have them appear in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The first resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, December 9, 1907, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate—

First. Whether the issue of the certificates of indebtedness, bearing 3 per cent interest, bids for which were invited by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, were for the purpose of borrowing money to "meet public expenditures," as provided by section 32 of the act approved June 13, 1898; and if not, whether there is any warrant of law for the issue of said certificates.

Second. Whether the issue of fifty million of bonds of the Panama Canal loan, bids for which were called for by the Secretary of the Treasury on November 18, 1907, was required to "defray the expenditures" on said canal, there being, at the time when both of these loans were made, upward of $200,000,000 in the Treasury for current expenditures.

Third. Whether there is any legislation necessary to protect the people and business interests of the country from the issue of unlawful money, if clearing-house certificates are such, and to prevent the illegal increase of the public debt in time of peace.

The second resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN, December 9, 1907, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to investigate and report to the Senate as soon as practicable—

First. Whether clearing-house certificates with which the country is now flooded have been issued under authority of law or contrary to the same.

Second. Whether the issuing of such certificates by an association of banks, both State and national, and the use of the same as money, subjects such certificates or notes to the tax of 10 per cent provided in section 3412, United States Revised Statutes.

Third. Whether it would be permissible under the law as it is for an association of banks, warehouses, and elevators to issue certificates based on cotton, wheat, and tobacco stored in such warehouses and elevators and fully insured, to be used as money in marketing said crops in the same way as clearing-house certificates are now used.

Mr. TILLMAN. In connection with this matter, as showing the necessity for an investigation, I wish to have read some correspondence which I have received relating to this subject, so that the necessity for some action by the Finance Committee shall be more apparent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WILMINGTON, DEL., December 21, 1907.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,

DEAR SIR: Noting in the public press of the various resolutions of Mr. CULBERSON and yourself regarding the operation of the Secretary of the Treasury "under a square deal Administration" concerning the recent Panama Canal bond issue, I am sending you a letter received from the Treasury Department in response to my inquiry as to why I was not awarded any of the bonds, which I think is one of the most remarkable. I bid for a block of these bonds at various prices, ranging from 104.6145, highest, to 104.375 low, averaging 104⅜ (about) for the lot. There is little to wonder at the length of time which was required from the opening of the bids to the announcement of awards when one considers the possible jugglery necessary to eliminate certain bidders to favor others, which seems most likely. You perhaps are already in possession of some or all of the facts in the matter, but send you these, if of any use.

Kindly return the Department letter if you do not need it.

Very truly,

GEORGE J. KLOBERG,
620 West Fourth street.

Mr. TILLMAN. It will be seen by the letter of this gentleman, who signs his name and who is easily to be found, that he bid for some of the Panama bonds more than 104, while, as I recall the press statement—at least the impression is very strong on my mind—a very large number of these bonds have been sold to banks at about 102½, and the question how the Secretary of the Treasury gets authority to refuse a bid for 104 and then sells for a little over 102 is and will be an important one. So I thought it worth while to remind the Senator from Rhode Island, who is chairman of the Committee on Finance, that there is something for his committee to do in the way of investigation.

Here I have a letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. J. H. Edwards, which I will myself read, as it is very short:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
DIVISION OF LOANS AND CURRENCY,
Washington, December 20, 1907.

Mr. GEORGE J. KLOBERG,
620 West Fourth street, Wilmington, Del.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 17th instant, you are informed that individual bidders whose bids were greater than $10,000 were not allotted any Panama bonds.

Respectfully, yours,

J. H. EDWARDS,
Assistant Secretary.

The mere statement, Mr. President, that the banks were made favorites, while private citizens were ignored and pushed aside, is one which is worthy of our consideration. In connection with that I have here a postal card from some personal friends of mine who are engaged in merchandising in Augusta, Ga., which is very pertinent. It is as follows:

AUGUSTA, GA., December 21, 1907.

DEAR SENATOR: How is this for graft? The Secretary of the Treasury places vast sums of currency in the New York banks to relieve "financial stringency." These same banks are now charging from 1 to 1¼ per cent premium on this money to Southern banks. The "panic" is a source of profit to some.

Respectfully,

MURPHY & Co.

These two communications, the one from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury and the other from this mercantile firm, speak for themselves.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TILLMAN. I do.

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to inquire if the Delaware citizen who wrote the letter which has been read is the same man who has instituted suit against the Secretary of the Treasury in respect to these bonds?

Mr. TILLMAN. I am not prepared to answer that question, for I did not charge my memory with the name of the citizen who brought that suit. I think, however, it is a New York man who has a case pending in the court here calling for an injunction, and we know very well how far he will get.

Mr. BAILEY. My understanding is that a suit has been instituted to test the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to make this arbitrary and, as I think, indefensible discrimination against individuals and in favor of the banks. It is all the more arbitrary and is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the principal purpose of the issuing of these bonds was to attract money from its hiding places. Now, you might attract it from the place where an individual had hidden it, but you could not very well attract it from the hiding places in the banks.

More than that, if it be true—and I take it that it is true—that a part of the understanding under which these bonds were allotted to the banks was that 90 per cent of their purchase price should be left on deposit with the banks, then the banks would be receiving from the Government interest at the rate of 30 per cent per annum; in other words, the Government sold these bonds to the banks at the price of 102½. It then deposited in the banks 90 per cent of the purchase price; so that on an investment of $10 the bank would be drawing $3 interest, or at the rate of 30 per cent per annum. I should myself like to know where the Secretary of the Treasury derives his authority to sell bonds, when there was no pretense that the money was needed or that the Government intended to use it at that time in the construction of the Panama Canal. It was generally understood that it was one of the measures to relieve the financial pressure; and when the Secretary advertised these Government securities, it was upon the theory that the people who distrusted the financial institutions had not lost their faith in the Government, and that the money which they had hidden would be taken from its hiding places and invested in the securities of the Government. Yet under that kind of a plan and with that kind of a profession on his lips, the Secretary of the Treasury seems to have declined the money which the individual citizen was willing to take from his trunk or other place of hoarding, and to have turned the bonds over to the national banks under an arrangement which will yield them 30 per cent per annum.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury in not making the report before the 1st of January has, in my mind, clearly disobeyed the law as read by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] a little while ago, I think there will be opportunity some time in the near future for considerable discussion of the financial status and the doings of our servants at the other end of the avenue. For the present, I will withhold any further discussion or consideration until we get the report that is promised us on Wednesday.

Mr. ALDRICH. The last sentence uttered by the Senator from South Carolina contains a very wise statement. It seems to me this discussion is more or less premature.

Mr. TILLMAN. Oh, not premature. It can not be premature when evidence is produced showing the Senator from Rhode Island, as chairman of the Committee on Finance, the necessity for an investigation, for here is a citizen who promises and offers to produce the evidence that he bid 1.04 and was awarded none of the bonds, while the banks were given millions of dollars of the bonds at 1.02½.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from South Carolina consider that statement of his correspondent as evidence in this case?

Mr. TILLMAN. Does the Senator from Rhode Island venture to dispute that this man will prove it?

Mr. ALDRICH. We have asked the Secretary of the Treasury for the information, which will be before the Senate within forty-eight hours, and I prefer to wait until we get an official statement rather than to discuss hypothetically what has been done upon the statement of an unknown correspondent.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. TILLMAN. In answer to the inquiry of this citizen, there is the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury explaining why he was not allotted bonds, which in itself is evidence that the bid was made.

Mr. BAILEY. I was about to suggest that what I had said was not based upon any information furnished by an unknown correspondent, but was based upon the letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury himself. I should have hesitated to make any criticism of an officer of the Government upon either an anonymous communication or a communication signed by a man whose character and antecedents were unknown to me. But what I complained about, and what I think I had a right to complain about, was that over his own signature the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury declared that he allotted no bonds to any individual bidder beyond the modest amount of $10,000, but that, denying to the citizen the right to participate in this loan, he reserved it and its special privileges and high profits for the banks alone. I made that statement and was moved to make it by the letter written by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury himself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 4777. An act restricting in certain cases the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in habeas corpus proceedings; and

H. R. 6231. An act to attach Shelby County, in the State of Texas, to the Beaumont division of the eastern judicial district of said State and to detach it from the Tyler division of said district.

H. R. 3923. An act to fix the limitation applicable in certain cases, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 4891. An act to authorize the city of Burlington, Iowa, to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River;

H. R. 7618. An act to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 9087. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize Washington and Westmoreland counties, in the State of Pennsylvania, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of Pennsylvania," approved February 21, 1903;

H. R. 9121. An act to authorize a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa; and

H. R. 10519. An act to authorize the Nashville and Northeastern Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Celina, Tenn.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 1) amending an act relative to the public printing and binding, approved March 1, 1907, which was, on page 2, line 14, after the word "number," to insert:

And provided further, That hearings of committees may be printed as Congressional documents only when specifically ordered by Congress or either House thereof.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. Let the amendment be again stated.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to have that part of the joint resolution read as it will stand if amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That of the "usual number," the copies which are intended for distribution to State and Territorial libraries and other designated depositories of all annual or serial publications originating in or prepared by an Executive Department, bureau, office, commission, or board shall not be numbered in the document or report series of either House of Congress, but shall be designated by title and bound as hereinafter provided, and the departmental edition, if any, shall be printed concurrently with the "usual number:" And provided further, That hearings of committees may be printed as Congressional documents only when specifically ordered by Congress or either House thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland, that the Senate concur in the amendment made by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 507) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Nebraska.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is morning business closed?

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to rise to morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is not closed.

Mr. TILLMAN. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that he defer his request for a few minutes until we get through with resolutions, and then I am sure no one will object to the passage of the bill which he desires to call up.

Mr. KEAN. Then, I think as soon as we get through with the resolutions we ought to go to the Calendar. It is very short, and we may clear up all the business on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair suggests to Senators that they observe the rule, which requires that the Chair shall be addressed before they take the floor. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. TILLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TILLMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. TELLER. I understand the Senator from Nebraska asked the Senate to pass a bill. There is so much confusion here that nobody knows what is going on. I insist that before the bill is passed or before it passes beyond the stage when objection can be made——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the request for unanimous consent objection was interposed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. TELLER. If the bill is not before the Senate, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. TILLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I merely wish to correct the Chair somewhat in that the Senator from New Jersey merely asked for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is morning business.

STOCK OWNERSHIP OF INTERSTATE-COMMERCE CORPORATIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. I desire to call up Senate resolution 45, and I ask that it may be put on its passage. It comes over from a previous day and has the right to be discussed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a former day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. TILLMAN December 18, 1907, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be directed to inform the Senate whether any corporations engaged in interstate commerce are the owners of any of the capital stock of other corporations which are transporting passengers and freight; and if so, the Commission is further directed to transmit a statement showing the extent and details of such ownership so far as the facts now appear in the office of the Commission, and to state in what cases the corporations whose stock so owned have been competitors for traffic with the corporations owning their stock.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, when this resolution was last before the Senate I objected to its consideration, as I then feared it would take up too much of the time of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I now find that the reports of the Commission contain this information for a series of years, and I have no doubt the Commission have in their possession information which will bring the matter up to date. I therefore withdraw my objection to the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator, because it saves me the trouble of explaining why I introduced the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] be assigned to the following committees:

Agriculture and Forestry, Post-Offices and Post-Roads, Public Lands, Privileges and Elections, Education and Labor, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, Railroads, Coast and Insular Survey, and Industrial Expositions (Select).

The motion was agreed to.

EXPOSITION AT QUITO, ECUADOR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the respective Houses of the Congress a letter from the Secretary of State representing the appropriateness of early action in order that in response to the invitation of the Government of Ecuador the Government of the United States may be enabled fittingly to participate in the exposition which is to be opened at Quito on August 10, 1909, in celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the independence of Ecuador. This will be our first opportunity to join with one of our sister American Republics in commemorating and honoring a centennial which in the annals of each Republic of the American hemisphere is the most cherished.

The recommendations of this report have my hearty approval, and I hope that the Congress will see fit to make timely provision to enable the Government to respond appropriately to the invitation of the Government of Ecuador in the sending of a commissioner and a Government exhibit, and in the erection of a building at this exposition.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1908.

EXPORTS FROM GERMANY TO THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 10th of December last, a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers, in relation to declared exports from Germany to the United States in the months of July and August, 1906 and 1907, respectively, and also similar information regarding the months of September, October, and November, 1906 and 1907.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1908.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

Mr. BURKETT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 507.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey demands the regular order, which is the Calendar under Rule VIII. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 550) providing for stated leaves of absence to entrymen under the homestead laws was announced as the first business in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to object to the bill, but I do not quite understand its scope. Is the bill general in its nature?

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from Oregon will allow me, I will explain it. It is the object and effect of the bill simply to allow homesteaders to be absent during the hard part of the winter—January, February, and March—and it provides that in consequence of such leave they shall not be deprived of their homestead rights. That is the whole scope of the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I think the bill is all right. The only question in my mind is whether it includes all the States, or only a few. If only a few, I wish to have the State of Oregon inserted.

Mr. NELSON. It is a general bill.

Mr. FULTON. Very well. I understood that it had been amended.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALDRICH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

REVISION OF PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the unfinished business be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2982.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I understand that this is the formal reading of the bill, and it is not now being read for amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is the formal reading of the bill. The understanding of the Senator from Minnesota is correct.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 14, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

STATUS OF NATURALIZED CITIZENS.

The injunction of secrecy was removed January 13, 1908, from a convention signed at Rio de Janeiro on August 13, 1906, by the delegates of the Governments represented at the Third International Conference of American States, establishing the status of naturalized citizens who again take up their residence in the country of their origin.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 13, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.
The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 11, 1908, was read and approved.

SECOND HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the bill (H. R. 300) providing for second homestead entries, with an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who, prior to the passage of this act, has made entry under the homestead laws, but from any cause has lost or forfeited the same, shall be entitled to the benefits of the homestead law as though such former entry had not been made, and any person applying for a second homestead under this act shall furnish the description and date of his former entry.

The report of the committee (inserted by unanimous consent) is as follows:

REPORT.

[To accompany H. R. 300.]

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 300) providing for a second homestead entry, report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The necessity for and advisability of legislation from time to time providing for second homestead entries in cases where the entryman has been unable to perfect title to the land covered by his first entry has long been recognized by Congress. In 1889 and again in 1900 legislation of this character was had, and as time passes and the public lands subject to homestead entry are largely in regions where the perfecting of homestead entries is surrounded by many difficulties the necessity for the legislation increases.

The American homesteader is constantly pushing forward from the confines of settlement on to new lands, and passing beyond the region of assured and plentiful rainfall he has, from time to time, invaded territory where conditions were such as to render it impossible for him in many cases to retain his land and obtain title to it. Years of extreme drought and other conditions—sometimes permanent in character, sometimes temporary—have often compelled him to give up the struggle, and yet the spirit of the pioneer is so strong in the breast of many of these men that after a lapse of a few years, during which time they have been able to somewhat recoup their fortunes, they desire to again make an effort to secure a home on the public lands.

These men make the best and most successful homesteaders in the regions where conditions are trying for the pioneer. They have had experience which qualifies them to cope with the conditions more successfully than the man who has never made the attempt and is unfamiliar with conditions in the region in which he desires to settle.

In the past few years the adoption of improved methods of cultivation and the introduction of crops suitable to semiarid regions have encouraged the settlement of lands which a few years ago were considered valueless except for grazing purposes. To cope with the situation in such regions no man is so well qualified as he who has had experience under somewhat similar circumstances.

This bill was referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and his favorable report on the legislation accompanies and is made part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 4, 1908.

SIR: I am now in receipt, by your reference, of H. R. bill No. 300, providing for second homestead entries, with the request that this Department make a report thereon with suggestions relative to its passage.

The provisions of this bill are very much akin to the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889 (25 Stat., 854), and the act of June 5, 1900 (31 Stat., 672), and is more liberal in its terms than the act of April 28, 1904 (33 Stat., 527), in that this bill proposes to allow second entries to persons who have prior to its passage, for any cause, lost or forfeited entries made by them, while the act of 1904 limits this right to persons who are unable to perfect their entries on account of some unavoidable complication in their personal or business affairs, or who were honestly mistaken in the character of the land entered by them. This bill is distinguished from the act of 1904 by the further fact that that act required a showing that the former entry had not been relinquished or abandoned for a consideration, while this bill contains no such provision. The present bill will be easier to execute than was the act of 1904, and if Congress deems it wise to grant the right of second entry on the terms provided this Department knows of no reason why this bill should not become a law.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Hon. F. W. MONDELL,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have that bill explained. I would ask if the bill has been unanimously reported by the committee and would like to have some explanation of it. It seems to be a matter of general legislation.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Texas that the Committee on the Public Lands has made a unanimous report favoring this bill. It is exactly the same law as was passed in June, 1900, with the exception that there is this addition, that the person applying for a second homestead entry shall furnish the description of his former entry. The amendment that I offered this morning makes it impossible for anyone who has relinquished his former entry for a consideration to be entitled to take a homestead under this bill.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee that dealt with the bill under consideration, I desire to say that I think it preserves every interest manifest in the provisions of the homestead law. I take it that this House is eminently qualified and likewise has a true anxiety to protect the spirit of the homestead law, and anything that deviates from a true protection of its wise and beneficent provisions would, I take it, meet with painstaking opposition from the Members of this House. On the other hand, I feel that if this proposed measure lends dignity, uniformity, aid, and assistance to the present provisions of the homestead law, and in addition thereto rewards unfortunate and honest home seekers and prospective home builders who have honestly and faithfully tried to procure and establish a home on the public domain, but by reason of accident, mistake, inadvertence, or other unfortunate circumstances have failed, then, and in that event, I am quite sure it would meet with approval at the hands of this House, and they would at once become friends of this measure.

The proposed measure provides that any person who prior to the passage and approval of this bill has entered Government land, but for any cause has lost or forfeited his rights thereunder, totally failing to acquire title to any part of the public domain, shall have the right to take or file again. This is the first part of the measure. The amendment or second part of the measure is the entryman shall only be allowed to take again or avail himself of the provisions of this measure where he has not received anything of value for the former entry and where his former entry has not been canceled for fraud. This feature of the measure is an ample safeguard against any possible wrongdoers, and I am sure will allay the suspicions and anxiety of any Member who seeks to oppose the provisions of this law.

I have an abiding faith that the Members of this House have true and well-defined ideas to reward the bona fide home seeker and home owner and think, further, that for the benefit of some of the gentlemen who have not lived in the Western public-land countries, where homesteading has prevailed for a series of years, and must of necessity be largely unfamiliar with the minutia of the different openings, a word to them explanatory would not be out of place.

In the former openings many novel and weird ideas have prevailed. Some of the openings have been by horse race, where the speed of the horse determined the quality of the home selected. In others by a lottery, where it was purely a game of chance.

Time, consideration, and judgment could not be consulted in this manner of opening public lands, and the home seeker desirous of procuring a home for himself and his posterity must select under those very adverse circumstances. After the hasty selection was made under the strain and excitement of a public opening and when time and cooler judgment had returned, then when the homesteader, the home seeker, the man for whom the wise and beneficent provisions of the homestead law were enacted, gathers his loved ones around him and sets out to hunt corner stones and locate his claim, and finds that he has located on a sandhill, on a rocky knob, in a ravine, on a cactus or alkali spot, what is he to do? Lo! this measure offers the relief that this Congress and the true provisions of the homestead law intend, namely, that of backing off and making another selection. Is he, with an honest heart and a true American desire, to be thwarted from an additional chance or an additional entry? No, indeed. Those who oppose the bill are men who from other localities have been unable to acquaint themselves with the true condition of making a hasty selection of a home on the public domain.

The homestead law, as I firmly believe, was to furnish homes for the homeless. This is truly the spirit and intent, as you must all agree. This being true, then let us not without due caution and consideration vote down this measure, that has for its purpose but a reward for an honest but thwarted hope. Let the home owner and home seeker prosper and improve. Let the time never come when the doctrine of the Christian religion will be so foreign to us and ours as to turn a deaf ear to him who has tried and failed and is willing to try again.

Many oversentimental men may contend and say that as they were once clothed with a chance they should not be heard further. This is a rigorous and a harsh rule and in this class of cases is devoid of being a rule at all. Men have not had the opportunity to select with eyes open. They have had to adopt the plans in vogue from time to time for such openings and select amidst the fiercest competition. Shall you reward the men who have once tried and are willing to try again; or shall you say that an honest effort not only does not avail but on the contrary does deny a chance to try again?

The Government loses nothing. If the homeseeker has never acquired title to the land surely the Government has lost nothing. On the contrary, in each case they have profited thereby from fees paid by the homesteader for the entry or filing. Let the bill pass and no violence will be done to heart or conscience. Let the bill pass and honest effort will be rewarded with another trial. Let the bill pass and thereby furnish homes to men who know the conditions and will make the West prosper and improve.

Members who are unfamiliar with the provisions of the bill may say that "It permits too many chances. They may have sold out and received valuable consideration for their former entry." This measure, my friends, deals fully with that, for in the second section it provides that in cases where the former entry has been canceled for fraud or where the first and original entry was disposed of for a valuable consideration then and in that event the applicant can not avail himself of the provisions of this measure.

Once more let me urge you to remember that the class of citizens that this measure affects has never acquired title to any Government land in the past. Never title to one foot of the Government domain through the provisions of the homestead law. Further, that the class of citizens for whom this bill is proposed is now clamoring to obtain a home, and I submit that is a holy undertaking in any land and in any clime. Again let me reiterate that if this class of citizens have received nothing from the Government but a thwarted opportunity surely the Government has lost nothing, but maintains her equilibrium as before.

Friends of this measure accepted the amendment thereto, not as a rebuke or a repudiation of the committee that reported it; neither with the intention of burdening the Department, who has to pass on each individual case before a second entry can be made, but because we believe that the bill as amended will render a marked and material assistance in its present form and the relatively small number that would be affected by it.

Congress has heretofore legislated on three different occasions on this subject—to wit, in 1889, 1900, and 1904—and never before has it been considered wise or necessary to burden the officers in charge with a showing from each individual applicant for second entry, the cases of canceling for fraud being so rare and the investigation so circuitous. In view of the foregoing, I will say, frankly, that I liked the bill better as the committee reported it from the committee room, but in its present form it will furnish homes to the homeless, furnish hearthstone and roof for the home seeker, will reward an honest but thwarted effort with a second chance, and will let the western districts who have Government land prosper and improve.

I hope this measure will not receive further opposition from either side of this House, for I believe it a just one and an important one. I think I can offer as a reason for the faith that is in me the fact that my entire life has been spent in public-land countries, and I know of their wants, hopes, aspirations, and desires. Their homes are founded on the foundation of deprivation, their lives have been one of aspiration and hope, their efforts have made the West what it is to-day, and without them the West would be a hunting ground and a waste.

The West invites them. The West wants them. The West can use them. The West can furnish homes for them. The home is the greenest of green spots. Gentlemen, let this measure pass. [Applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, having examined the amendment, which seems to be entirely proper, I do not wish to make any objection to the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GRONNA, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to joint resolution of the following title:

Joint resolution (S. R. 1) amending an act relative to the public printing and binding, approved March 1, 1907.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 194. An act to authorize the county of St. Francis, in the State of Arkansas, to construct a bridge across St. Francis River at or near the town of Madison, in said county and State.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 1192. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section No. 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to mining claims—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during this Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

JAMES W. NELSON.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11444) granting an increase of pension to James W. Nelson, and that that bill do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

QUITO (ECUADOR) EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the respective Houses of the Congress a letter from the Secretary of State, representing the appropriateness of early action in order that in response to the invitation of the Government of Ecuador the Government of the United States may be enabled fittingly to participate in the exposition which is to be opened at Quito on August 10, 1909, in celebration of the hundredth anniversary of the independence of Ecuador. This will be our first opportunity to join with one of our sister American Republics in commemorating and honoring a centennial which in the annals of each Republic of the American hemisphere is the most cherished.

The recommendations of this report have my hearty approval, and I hope that the Congress will see fit to make timely provision to enable the Government to respond appropriately to the invitation of the Government of Ecuador in the sending of a commissioner and a Government exhibit, and in the erection of a building at this exposition.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 13, 1908.

REVISION OF CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11701.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the penal codification bill, with Mr. BANNON in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. If two or more persons in any State, Territory, or District conspire to prevent, by force, intimidation, or threat, any person from accepting or holding any office, trust, or place of confidence under the United States, or from discharging any duties thereof; or to induce by like means any officer of the United States to leave any State, Territory, District, or place where his duties as an officer are required to be performed, or to injure him in his person or property on account of his lawful discharge of the duties of his office, or while engaged in the lawful discharge thereof, or to injure his property so as to molest, interrupt, hinder, or impede him in the discharge of his official duties, each of such persons shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than six years, or both.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentlemen who have this bill in charge something about the change made in this provision, which I understand is also made in a good many others, namely, the elimination of minimum punishments.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I wish to ask somebody who knows about this bill as to the elimination of minimum punishments. I understand that this policy runs all through the bill.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to hear about it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I made a full discussion, Mr. Chairman, the other day upon that question. Unfortunately, my voice is scarcely in a condition to speak very extensively to-day. Does the gentleman desire to hear those arguments repeated? We have set forth in the report the reasons why the committee recommended the abolition of minimum punishments.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this is a wise departure. There are gathered into this revision a large number of sections, some passed at one time and some at another; some have been long in the statutes and some are compartively new. Now, those who passed these various acts at various times evidently were of the opinion that a minimum as well as a maximum limit should be prescribed. The effect of this change is by wholesale to substitute the judgment, the varying judgment, of this or that Federal court for the deliberate judgment of the legislative body which enacted these various statutes. It is presumed that the Congress for good reasons provided that in certain cases there should not be a less punishment than so and so. Now, what good reason can there be for remitting all to this or that Federal court? There is just as much reason for fixing a minimum punishment as there is for fixing a maximum punishment, and the question of uniformity, it seems to me, has on this point no weight as an argument. It is a notion of the Commission, reenforced, no doubt, by views of judges of the Federal court, that it would be a desirable thing to have uniformity, which increases the power and the option of the Federal judges.

These statutes are made from time to time. Congresses and the Members who compose them come and go. When a particular statute is passed and it is the judgment of those who enact it to fix a minimum punishment there is no reason why a commission should revise and reverse that deliberate judgment of the lawmaking body for the sake of uniformity. Now, as far as I am concerned, I would like to legislate in the direction of giving the Federal judges just as little option as possible, and nothing beyond necessary powers. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Danger lies in the abuse of power by Federal judges and Federal courts—in the abuse of discretion by them—and this legislation tends to increase their power and control, not directly over the persons who from time to time may be placed upon trial in the courts, but over the body of the law itself. Why, in this section, for instance, the original section 5518, now in the statutes as we have——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I ask some additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] asks unanimous consent for additional time of five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman offer any amendment to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not done so.

Mr. PAYNE. Then the whole debate is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no objection made.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better proceed in order.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I would like to oblige by being in order. I move to strike out the penalty affixed in this section and restore that which was in the original law.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Which section does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. DE ARMOND. We are now upon section 22, as I understand.

The motion is to strike out what this Commission has put in by way of amendment with reference to penalty and insert what is now in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves to strike out what is provided in the section and insert in lieu thereof what is provided for in the original law. The Chair thinks the amendment of the gentleman should be reduced to writing.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Very well; I will have it written up and send it to the desk, and to save time, if I may be indulged——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to proceed, he can do so on the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Very well; we shall have a discussion on the pro forma amendment, then.

Mr. Chairman, as this policy runs through this bill, this is a matter that is worthy of some consideration at this point. Now, I do not propose to criticize the Commission, but I do believe that the Commission took upon itself a tolerably important function when it went into the business of changing every atom of criminal statute with reference to minimum punishments provided by existing law. It was suggested the other day, when sections 19 and 20 were under consideration and amendments were offered, that it is a serious thing to endeavor to break in upon this revision by offering new provisions, and yet this revision is absolutely full of new provisions, and, as to this particular matter, very important. It will be in the power of the judge of the Federal court if the minimum punishment be abolished to impose a fine of 1 cent, or imprisonment for one second, and make a farce out of the law. It is not very long since there was a happening in Nebraska which I think fully illustrates a possibility of this kind of legislation. There was a conviction there and a punishment merely nominal was imposed, and was permitted, I suppose, in that particular case, by the law applicable, no minimum being fixed. Now, we are about to provide that policy for all Federal offenses. I do not think it ought to be done. It may be that sometimes the minimum is wrong and the maximum not the wisest and best. But certainly it is well enough when these are matters which go to the liberty and property rights of a citizen, meaning, maybe, comparative affluence or beggary, that there be some kind of legislative judgment exercised in the matter. Now, there is the judgment of the lawmaking body that certain offenses should not be punished by less than some minimum fine or imprisonment. Why take that away entirely and submit it to this or that judge, here, there, and everywhere, now and for the future? This seems to me to be a bad legislative proposition which ought not to find support here. It may bring convictions; but what of that? A man may be coerced into a plea of guilty to escape present bankruptcy, by holding out to him an intimation or assurance that he shall be punished but lightly. It may be that we would gain something in convictions that way. Yet there is no good reason for it.

I am aware that a number of the Federal judges are in favor of this change. Every man loves power, and a man does not lose that characteristic when he goes upon the Federal bench. By putting this power in the hands of the Federal judge he might make the punishment so light as to be a travesty on justice; a laughing matter, if you please. But somebody suggests that he will not do that, and that no harm will be done. How are they to be better judges of what should be law than the lawmaking body? This is a part of the lawmaking power. Why not remove also the maximum punishment, if you give jurisdiction to the judges to impose light and trivial punishment for what the legislative body deems a grave and serious offense? Why not give them jurisdiction to impose an adequate punishment, extending as high and as far as the merits of the case warrant? Why make a change as to the minimum and not as to the maximum? The reason for one is a reason also for the other. A reason for the removal of one limit is an equally good reason for the removal of the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman withdraw the pro forma amendment?

Mr. DE ARMOND. I propose to offer an amendment for this punishment provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 22 by striking out all after the word "persons," in line 24, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 or more than $5,000, or by imprisonment not less than six months nor more than six years, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Mr. DE ARMOND. And I desire to insert also the words "with or without hard labor."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry to feel compelled to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND], but I shall give my reasons very briefly for the opposition.

In the first place, I do not believe, as a general principle, in limiting the power of the court in the direction of mercy in fixing a penalty.

In the second place, Mr. Chairman, this statute is one of the few remaining relics of reconstruction times. It was put upon the statute book to meet the Kuklux conditions of those days. It really ought not to be upon the statute book any longer. The occasion of it having passed, the statute ought to have passed with the occasion. If the provision as reported by the committee in the bill now pending before the House be adopted, then in case of proceedings under the law the man who is before the court may be fined as little as 25 cents or a dollar, and he may be imprisoned as short a time as one hour or one day. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri shall prevail, then the court will be compelled to fix a fine of not less than $500, and will be compelled to fix an imprisonment, if it fixes any imprisonment at all, of not less than six months. So that so far from the proposition of the Commission being a proposition to do away with a minimum punishment, the proposition of the amendment is to do away with a minimum punishment and fix a heavy fine that must be levied as a minimum, and a grave imprisonment that must be inflicted as a minimum.

For these reasons it seems to me that the amendment ought to be defeated.

I think we have had enough of this old anti-Southern legislation. My own opinion is that section 22 ought to be stricken out, and that a motion to strike it out ought to be made; and at the proper time I shall make that motion, without any further argument of it than that which I have now made, to wit, that it is a relic of reconstruction and sectional-hatred times, and that it ought to pass with the conditions that gave rise to it. But if it is to remain on the statute book, then, speaking for my section and for my people, I want it to remain possible, as the Commission's report makes it possible, for the court to be lenient in the sentencing of the defendant.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out section 22.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 92, noes 107.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. WILLIAMS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] may act in my place.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] will act in the place of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 129.

Accordingly the motion of Mr. WILLIAMS was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 21 for the purpose of offering a slight amendment, which I think the committee will accept.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to section 21 for the purpose of offering an amendment to that section.

Mr. PAYNE. I object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may state what his amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina may be permitted to make a statement as to what his proposed amendment is. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know why we should not go on with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "five," in line 24, and inserting the word "one;" and by striking out the word "six," in line 25, and inserting the word "one."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, if adopted, would make the fine $1,000 instead of $5,000 and the term of imprisonment one year instead of six years. That is all there is to it; it reduces the maximum fine from $5,000 to $1,000 and reduces the maximum imprisonment from six years to one year. I do not care to say anything more about it; I think it ought to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. DE ARMOND) there were—ayes 104, noes 123.

Mr. DE ARMOND. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania and Mr. DE ARMOND.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 107, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words of section 22. A moment ago I asked unanimous consent to return to section 21 to insert as an amendment after the word "custom" in line 2 the word "willful." I think the committee would agree that that should be put in because, mark you, the statute does not apply to the South alone, but to any judicial officer, any magistrate in the United States who makes a mistake in construing the State law. A mere violation by making an error makes him guilty under this statute. Every one would agree that a severe penal statute of this sort ought to have a proposition that the offense should be committed willfully, intentionally, or knowingly. You find the word "willfully" in section 54 and you find the word "knowingly" in section 59.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the committee has no objection to the insertion of the word "willfully" in section 21, as the gentleman proposes.

Mr. WEBB. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the word "willfully" may be inserted after the word "custom" in line 2 of section 21, page 26, and the committee agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina should first obtain unanimous consent to return to section 21.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I should object to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WEBB. I do not want to make that request, I ask unanimous consent to insert it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman must first obtain unanimous consent to return to section 21 before the amendment can be proposed.

Mr. WEBB. I understand that we can do most anything by unanimous consent, and if no one objects to my request I do not see why it should not be enacted.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina ask unanimous consent to return to section 21 for the purpose of making an amendment by inserting the word "willfully" after the word "custom" in line 2, page 13?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; and for that purpose only.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says "and for that purpose only."

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina that section 21 be amended by inserting the word "willfully" in line 2, page 13.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 23. No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States or of any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall be fined not more than $5,000.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, on line 4, page 14, of the section, the words "or of any State."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 4, strike out the words "or of any State."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I think this whole section ought to be stricken. As I said on Saturday, it is a relic of the legislation of the reconstruction period and was passed when the feeling between the North and the South was very bitter. We have lived to see the day when that feeling has passed away and when there is no longer any necessity for the maintenance upon our statute books of these barbaric sections, but if those who differ with me desire that this section or any part of it shall remain to control or regulate or punish the commissioners or officers authorized by law to select jurors in the Federal courts or in the Territories or other places over which Congress has exclusive jurisdiction, I am content for it to remain. But it does occur to me that in this enlightened period it is contrary to all the doctrines of this Republic and the rights of the States to say that the commissioners or officers of the State who select jurors for the trial of cases in the State courts shall be subject to a fine or punishment because of the alleged violation of a section like this. My State, and I know there are quite a number of States which have similar laws, has a constitutional provision with reference to the selection of grand and traverse jurors. The commissioners are selected by the judges of the superior court, the highest court known to our law except the supreme court, and our constitution requires them to select from the tax list "upright and intelligent men" for the traverse jurors and "upright, intelligent, and experienced men" for grand jurors. Yet, if the provision with reference to officers of the State remain on the statute books, it either must remain to be obsolete or disregarded, as it now is, or must stand there as a menace to the officers of the State in carrying out the demands and requirements of the constitutions of the various States. So, Mr. Chairman, I have made the motion to strike from this provision the requirements that if any officer shall exclude from the jury box of a State court a colored man he shall be punished. Let us leave it to the judgment of the State as to the right to conduct the business in the State court, as it has been reserved to them under the Constitution of the United States. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that in this day, when we are fast tending to centralization of all power in the General Government, it is well for us to strike from this section this provision, which makes it a felony for the officer of the State in selecting jurors for the trial of cases in the State courts to follow the State laws. I therefore move to strike out those words that I have indicated, and I hope that we may relegate it, with the bitterness from which it sprang, to the dead and forgotten past. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that in making this talk I desire to appeal to the gentlemen of the committee, because I believe that there are level-headed men on the other side of this House, men who are not here for the purpose of making formal objections, or for political effects, and I believe there are men here who rise to the patriotism of a Corporal Tanner or of a William McKinley. I had intended to make just the motion which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] has made, but I have changed it to a motion to strike out section 23, which makes it a crime against the United States for any officer having to do with the selection of jurors in State or Federal courts to be influenced in such selection by the race, color, or previous condition of servitude of a citizen. Before I urge any reason for that motion I want to say that if the position, in substance, of the gentleman from New York is to prevail, it will be another evidence that love of freedom is giving way to the demand for expediency. I do not believe that a motion to amend or strike out any section of this bill is any attack on the patriotism or action of the committee which reported it. Perhaps they did well to report it as it is.

I do not think so, but I believe they thought so. If they were appointed to collate and digest existing laws, they should have done so and made no change in existing law; but this is not true, because it is a bill to revise and amend the penal laws of the United States, and they have seen fit to make certain changes and to report to us a complete code, which they ask us to adopt, section by section. Yet they insist that we ought not to try to correct this code in passing it, but ought to pass it, right or wrong, now. That if it contains sections that are relics of a generation gone and a period of sectional animosities and war-time issues, or that are subversive of liberty and contrary to the conscience of the individual Member, nevertheless we ought to vote for each section as it is read, because it is a part of the code—it is a part of the law as it now stands, and it would take too long to go through the whole code and vote conscientiously for or against each section. If a more farcical comedy was ever rehearsed in a law-making body than was had over section 20 last Saturday, it would be worth dramatizing. That section was actually defended by no one. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] said if it meant what it was afterwards conceded to mean, it was unconstitutional and could do no harm, and on that ground, for a while, he defended it. After it was shown that it might likely be constitutional he ceased to defend it. Others urged its retention to save time of discussion; and the section stands, on the vote of numbers of Members who seem to be opposed to it in principle. In fact the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] declared that on a separate bill for that purpose he would vote to strike out that section. This code, he says, must be passed section by section, but not with care to be right. We must pass it and adopt it practically with all its defects and whatever iniquities the present laws may have. Mr. President, whatever is worth doing is worth doing well, is worth doing right.

Mr. Chairman, whenever a Member of this House urges the adoption of a measure that may destroy freedom because the House hasn't got time to correct it, or it would take too much time to correct it, he is losing that love of liberty which in my section stands above all other political loves, and which Patrick Henry once placed higher than love of life. I do not know what others may think, but as for me, I think there is no time too long for me to take before I cast a vote to rivet a chain or bind a fetter upon a freeman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, you adopt this code under the pleasing fiction that with separate single bills you can correct with ease its iniquities, and you are walking in a fool's paradise. I fear there is a deathlike sleep for many a bill of worth and merit affecting more people than many of these sections do, in the waste basket of committees. Bills, too, that could they but reach a vote would pass this House. Vote for a law trusting to repeal it later? Hold out my hands to be voluntarily bound, trusting to be released after I am in prison? Not while I love liberty and right. You have clothed, so it is said, the Speaker with dictatorial power and placed all legislation in the hands of a few committees. I fear we have forgotten the lesson that eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to this section 23. It bears on its face the earmarks of its origin. It was the outgrowth of those bitter years when the South lay prostrate in the ashes of desolation, when the iron heel was on her neck and the iron hand was at her throat, and the unctuous righteousness and mistaken zeal of the victorious forces of one section of this great land were seeking to place an untutored race of former slaves in authority over their own brethren of another section and to force an unwilling association of a proud people with a race they regarded as inferior.

For forty years this law has been on the statute books, and to what end save ends of bitterness? It has been a law that every white State judge, sheriff, or jury commissioner in the South, and many a Federal officer, has consciously or unconsciously violated. In forty years you of the North have learned that it is better to leave to us of the South the regulation of our own social and State institutions. You can not change the leopard's spots. This is a white man's country, and if God is merciful to us it always will be. [Applause.] In days of calmer judgment you yourselves, I trust, would not have it otherwise. If the presence of the negro in our land is the consequence of a crime—the crime of his capture and enslavement—the crime was the crime of your father and of mine. This law was only intended to affect the South. It has no place on the Federal statute books. It seeks to go into the very sanctuary of the State courts and tell them how they shall select their juries and enforce their laws.

You can not enforce it. We have no laws by which a negro is excluded from jury service or from any social or legal right. We do not need, we do not want such laws. We only want that, with the constitution of our own States as well as the Constitution of the United States guaranteeing to the negro every legal right, we be left alone to work out the joint destiny of the white man and the black man in the South as God shall give us wisdom; and we will not treat him worse than you would were you there.

Now, I appeal to you to help us bury the past, not by telling us to forget it and break up the solid South, but by actions that show we are one. Politically you might lose a few colored votes in the North by striking out this section, but I do not think you will, for the negro is as prone to go to you in politics as he is to come to us in trouble. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. I object.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose either the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] or the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY]. I do arise, however, for the purpose of putting my position as a member of this committee right before the Committee of the Whole House, and, as I believe also, to properly present the views of the other members of the committee.

I for one have never taken and never shall take the position that because a committee reports a bill to a Committee of the Whole House that no amendment or perfection of that bill ought to be had, or that the House should accept the work of that committee absolutely. That, carried to its logical result, would authorize the House to dispense with the reading of the bill in the Committee of the Whole and to pass it as it came from the special committee reporting it. My position is simply this: That an amendment looking to the perfection of the text or looking to the elimination of any section is a proper amendment to be considered by the Committee of the Whole, and I shall never, for one, object to the consideration of any amendment of that sort. On Saturday I did criticise certain amendments because I did not think they were properly within the scope of this bill and did not properly pertain to the section then under consideration. That is always a question upon which men may differ; but I do not want any Member of this House to believe that I have the egotism to think that the work of a committee that I am a member of is of such excellence that it could not be improved and should not be improved by members of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The gentleman has certainly misunderstood me if he has gathered from anything that I have said concerning any amendment that I have criticised him in any way.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not misunderstood the gentleman from Georgia, and I am not referring to anything the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] said, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] stated that he thought the arguments that had been made in regard to leaving the bill as it came from the committee were of that nature and were not valid arguments. I do not think the committee intended to convey any such impression. It would be monstrous if we should say to the Committee of the Whole: "You must accept this bill and get through with it and pass it as we brought it to you." What we do ask is that every Member shall, in the consideration of this bill, deal with it and with us frankly, and whenever an amendment looks to the perfecting of the bill, or to the elimination of sections that ought not to be kept, I for one will be glad to have the fullest advice of all the membership of the Committee of the Whole; and I want to say this in justice to myself and in justice to the committee. We are not trying to make our judgment the judgment of the Committee of the Whole. We will try and defend what has seemed to us wise in our various actions, but we do not claim absolute wisdom and we do not ask to be removed from any criticism fairly aimed at our work and aimed with a desire of perfecting legislation of importance to the whole country.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Just a word, Mr. Chairman, respecting the attitude of the committee in reference to this question. We found these sections of law existing upon the statute books. We found they were being employed by the legal department of the Government for the protection of the life, liberty and property of its citizens. And we found, Mr. Chairman, in addition, what we believed to be conclusive evidence that they exist upon the statute books to-day by reason of the action of a Democratic Congress. We found that in 1894, when Congress in both sections was Democratic, and when the Executive was Democratic, and this particular title was under consideration by that Democratic House, that that Democratic House at that time repealed all the laws of that period which they felt ought to be repealed. And the fact that they left these laws upon the statute books was an evidence that they had discovered that they were being used for the protection of the Government.

You will remember, Mr. Chairman, and the gentlemen on the floor of this House will remember, that at that time in this very title by the action of a Democratic House all that was regarded obnoxious of these sections were repealed. They repealed at that time by specific enactment sections 5511, 5512, 5513, 5514, 5515, 5516, 5517, 5518; and 5519 had been declared unconstitutional. Therefore, with this statute under consideration, a Democratic House and a Democratic President decided that these laws were of vital importance and permitted them to remain upon the statute books. Now, what were the rights, the duties, and the powers of our committee, under a reasonable construction of the power conferred upon the Commission of Revision? The work referred to our committee was the report of that Commission. That Commission had no power, in our judgment, to omit vital laws, and if we had assumed the responsibility and omitted from the statute books these laws we would have been deserving of the most severe censure of this House and of this country. Therefore, without any regard to their origin, without any regard to their efficacy to any fact, except they are being employed by the legal department of the country for the protection of our citizens, we permitted them to remain as laws. And the attitude of the committee to-day is this, that it being the organic law of the land, without doubting the right of this committee to make amendments, we do doubt its wisdom. We say that if these amendments are to be offered, and if we are to attempt to alter and change the substantive organic law of the land under this legislation, that not only will this work be endless, but of the greatest peril to this country.

If it be true that this provision can be changed, can be amended, and can be stricken out, the other sections of this law which will follow could with equal propriety be stricken out, as it is purely accidental that we happen to be considering the criminal section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. If we had, as we shall have later on, for the same purpose of revision and codification of any one of the substantive laws of this country—say, the interstate-commerce law—before this House, if under the work of revision and codification it is open to amendment or to a motion to strike out all the law on that subject, if legislation secured by years of effort of the greatest importance to the country, may be stricken down, I say that this work of codification and revision is a perilous one for the country to embark in. Therefore, on the part of the committee, I have objected and shall object to changes in existing law that bring under its operation any persons that are not included or any subject-matter upon which Congress has heretofore not seen fit to legislate. That is the attitude of the committee, and in pursuance of this attitude of the committee I ask that this amendment be voted down.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that gentlemen on that side have precipitated this debate. There was no necessity for it. Gentlemen, there is no enactment of law proposed here. We are dealing simply with a codification of existing laws. Why gentlemen should have seen fit to precipitate this kind of debate upon us at this time is something that I can not understand. This is a section that only seeks to preserve the rights of the citizen—no more; the right of a citizen who has every qualification fixed by the law for certain duties and certain obligations to perform these duties and obligations. That is all that it is the purpose of this statute to preserve. It is strange that this opposition should come from gentlemen who talk so much about democracy—that democracy that they have told us over and again has for its primary purpose the securement of "equal rights for all; special privileges for none." That is Democratic doctrine, you tell us. How many times have you rung the changes on that proposition in your national platform? How many times have you garnished your speeches with this declaration over and over repeated, to protect the rights of all—all American citizens? That is what this section proposes to do. Some gentleman says he wants bygones to be bygones. Why do you precipitate this debate if that is what you want? Does he mean by that that the spirit that made necessary this legislation thirty-five years ago is now dead, that there is no more of it, and therefore no necessity for the legislation? Is that true? I am reminded of a gentleman in this House who is fit to adorn the Senate of the United States, who is the peer of any man who has sat in that body during the last fifty years, a man who has every qualification, a man of popularity in his State, a man of infinite worth, who, in a contest that he had last summer, only triumphed by a few hundred votes, and that over a man who made his campaign, if the newspapers correctly reported him, upon the proposition of repealing the last three constitutional amendments and taking from a large class of citizens all of the rights of their citizenship. Yet upon a platform of that kind that gentleman came within a few votes of defeating this man so preeminently qualified to adorn the Senate of the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] I tell you, gentlemen, that so long as the spirit lives I want the letter of the law to live. [Renewed applause]. As long as that kind of sentiment finds popularity in the South, I want these statutes that were necessary at the time of their enactment to remain upon the statute books, and I am sorry that you gentlemen have precipitated this debate. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, of course I feel very grateful to the gentleman from Iowa for the very high compliment that he evidently intended for me. The gentleman from Iowa, however, is mistaken in his understanding of the cause of the results of the primary to which he refers in the State of Mississippi. My opponent in that State did not reduce my majority to its meager proportions because any great number of people in the State of Mississippi entertained or pretended to entertain the slightest idea that he could repeal the fifteenth amendment, or that it could be done on the initiative of anyone in the South.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment. It is true that that was a part of his platform, but that was not the cause of his popularity. He was personally a very popular man to start with, was a great "mixer" and a man of very "taking ways." He had made, in the second place, a very good governor of the State of Mississippi, had enforced the laws, and had stamped out, as far as he could, lawlessness throughout the State. In addition to this, perhaps the governor of the State of Mississippi has more patronage than any governor of any other State in the Union, growing out of our peculiar situation and conditions and the constitution that was enacted to meet them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having said that much—and I had no idea of saying anything at all in connection with this subject, but I am naturally averse to letting the gentleman from Iowa whip my people over my shoulders, even though the whip that he uses is armed with a cracker of compliment to myself—I want in addition to say in response to what the gentleman from Iowa has said about equal rights for all and special privileges for none, this:

It is not, and never was, and nobody ought ever to have attempted to make it appear to be the "right" of any citizen anywhere, that the Federal Legislature should fix or sit in judgment on the qualifications of a juror in a State court or to punish anybody for violation of the State laws fixing the same. [Applause.] I have stood under difficult circumstances, as the gentleman says, for "the rights" of men. I will stand for them again. But when I use the word "rights," I do not mean privileges. Men have an inherent right to equal "rights." Rights are God given. Privileges are statute conferred. I have never stood for the idea that there was a "right" in any man to vote, for example, although that language is carelessly used all the time. The suffrage is a statutory privilege conferred upon a man in the interest of society, and if any man is not competent to exercise it in the interest of society, he ought not to have it. I have never stood for the idea and I can not stand for the idea that the Federal Government has a right to prescribe the qualifications either of voters or of jurors in a State, except in a Federal court.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will.

Mr. HEPBURN. Does a citizen of the United States have the right to a trial by a jury of his peers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; he has.

Mr. HEPBURN. That is one right, isn't it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended five mintues. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a citizen of the United States, a citizen of Great Britain, a citizen of the colonies before there was any United States, had a right to trial by his peers; but it does not follow that the Federal Legislature shall prescribe who are his peers in a State court or execute the laws of the State prescribing who are his peers, or, in other words, who are competent jurors. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In Mississippi every man gets a trial by his peers, and many a man gets a trial by men who are more than his peers. Why, this argument of the gentleman from Iowa proceeds upon the idea that a State is not only in law but in fact a foreign power in regard to the Federal Government, and must be viewed with suspicion and caution, watched very carefully and jealously, for fear the inhabitants of the State are not capable of granting to themselves and their fellow-citizens the rights that were secured by Magna Charta and later on expressed in the Constitution of the United States. That States make mistakes now and then, I grant you. That the Federal Government makes mistakes now and then no man will be audacious enough to deny, but that either shall trench upon the rights granted to the one or reserved to the other is a proposition absolutely abominable. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And when this statute was passed it was passed for the purpose of enabling the United States indirectly to prescribe the qualifications of a juror in a State court. It ought not to have been passed. Something is said about the fact that it was not repealed in 1894. No; at the time public sentiment had not sufficiently ripened into a realization of the complete reconciliation of brethren across Mason and Dixon's line to enable it to be done, but to-day it ought to be granted that it has sufficiently ripened for that purpose.

I heartily indorse the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, while I heartily thank the gentleman from Iowa for the nice things he has said about me personally. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the language of this statute:

> No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

That statute was enacted thirty-odd years ago. It has been on the statute book during all of those years; on the statute book at a time when contention was rife over the question of the rights of the colored men in the South. Has there been any denunciation of that section by the Supreme Court of the United States? Has there been a question raised such as the gentleman raises now of its unconstitutionality? If not, I assume that his argument upon this question of the right of this Congress to indulge in this legislation ought not to have much weight.

Mr. HARDY rose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Before the gentleman from Iowa takes his seat I will ask him his opinion——

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The gentleman from Iowa had yielded the floor and the gentleman from Texas had been recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question for the gentleman from Iowa to say—whether he yielded the floor.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to say in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, that the motion to strike out this section does not involve the idea that there will be any deprivation of the rights of jury service on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; but this motion is made because section 23 does not establish the right in question. That right is established by the amendments to the Constitution adopted after the war. No State can deprive one of that right, but this section seeks to take the hand of the Federal Government and go to the State court and there probe the consciences of the State officers and to declare a penal offense if any officer of the State has, in the opinion of the Federal official, in his secret motive and purpose been influenced in his selection or nonselection of jurors by the fact that a man is colored or white. In other words, this law does not establish any right of the colored man. No statute of the State of Texas or any other Southern State deprives him of the right to serve on juries, but this law goes into the State court to help the State court administer the State law, and that is the iniquity of it.

If you will read this law you will see that it is not intended to prevent any statute of Texas or South Carolina or any other State impairing the constitutional provision that no man shall lose any right by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Had it declared void any State law taking away the right of jury service on account of race, color, etc., it would have been harmless, but this statute goes further, and says that the Federal law shall go into your State court and search the consciences of the State judge when he appoints the jury commissioners, of the jury commissioners when they select the jury, and of the sheriff when he summons them and say whether or not any of these officers in the performance of their duty have been influenced by the fact that a citizen was white or black, whether such officer in his conscience has violated this law. I say that you can not prove its violation in any case, but you have got the statute there for political claptrap, for the purpose of sentiment in appealing to the prejudices of the colored race. There can be no enforcement of the law, but it has caused expense on appeals by raising the question when the proof can not be made.

I say that the generous disposition now prevailing in this country, shown a hundred times by your present President, and also by the late lamented McKinley, tells us to bury and wipe off from the statutes these monuments of the past struggle, and it is for that reason that I offer the amendment. It is not to change the status of the negro, for it does not change it, but to wipe out a law that might subject us to prosecution and persecution, but can serve no useful purpose.

I wish I had time to tell you fully of an instance I read just to-day in the Washington Post. When the Japanese cruiser Soya dropped anchor the other day in the harbor of Chemulpo, the captain in command called all the sailors forward and with a magnanimous spirit put their flag at half-mast over the spot where a gallant foe went down in the war with Russia. The Soya was the Russian ship Variag. Upon that spot she had fought a gallant fight, but was sunk by the shot and shell of the Japs with overwhelming odds. After the war the Variag was raised by the Japs and became the Japanese cruiser Soya. Not only was the flag of the Soya dropped half the length of the jackstaff while she stood at anchor, but her captain with bared head addressed her crew. "The brave men who died on this ship, in the fight at this place," said he, "did for their sovereign what we tried to do for ours." A whole ceremony was gone through in honor of the dead heroes, their enemies. But you of the other side for forty years have cherished the memory of the struggle between the States in bitterness through these laws, and we are asked now to reenact a law which for forty years has been a menace and an occasion of bitterness, but otherwise a dead letter, and so known.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reference to the attitude of this committee in regard to this legislation now pending. We went to work in this committee and labored industriously for days and weeks. The result of that work has been the bill reported to this House. That bill has been reported unanimously, and while this is true it does not imply that every member of this committee indorses every section contained in this bill. We, as a matter of course, reserve the right to vote as our judgment dictates upon each proposition that comes up. As a whole, we believe that this is a wise measure. We believe it would be best to pass this bill in its present form—much better than to pass no bill at all. For this reason we have unanimously recommended the passage of the bill, and I want to say that it is no part of the duty of this committee to say that their work and their action shall be taken as conclusive or final. We submit to you the result of our labor and our consideration of this bill and it comes to the House to-day for what it is worth, and for this House to consider it and make just such alterations as its wisdom sees proper to make. Yet, for one, while I am thoroughly in accord with the general purpose of this report and the recommendation of this bill, I do not support every section of the 342 sections reported. I do not approve them all. I have demonstrated my position on this by voting in favor of amendments that have been offered to this bill to strike out these sections of law enacted in the reconstruction days, known as the "civil rights bill," or parts of it. I shall do so again when amendments meet my approval, notwithstanding the fact that I have signed this report and have submitted no minority report. It could not be expected that a minority report could be made upon every proposition that any Member might not indorse on all the 342 sections.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. With pleasure.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I fully appreciate the position of the gentleman and what I am going to ask is meant in no unkindly spirit. Members of the committee have a right to first recognition, and the minority members, and especially those who come from the South, would add weight to these amendments if they would make them themselves. That would indicate to us that we are not antagonizing the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, that that suggestion has been made. It brings to my mind a thought much emphasized by the present turn of affairs. That thought is that I doubt very much the wisdom of offering some of the amendments that have been offered to this bill. I doubt very much the good that will be accomplished. The discussion on the floor of this House of these measures can do no good, can accomplish no good purpose. Yet when these amendments are offered they call for the independent and honest action and vote of every Democrat and Republican upon this floor upon each independent proposition. So I say it is a question of doubt in my mind whether it is wise to offer amendments that bring up a discussion of this nature, that stir up party prejudice and excitement and bitterness which had better be let alone and let sleep—especially in view of the fact that no harm is being done by any of these statutes. Their fangs have been drawn from them by judicial construction and by conditions that are natural among free men. This particular section that we are now considering is a dead letter, so to speak, and for that reason I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] to strike it out, because I believe it unwise to keep upon the statute books laws that are not enforced. There is nothing that so much breeds disrespect and disregard for the law as statutes on the statute books that are not obeyed and not respected.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. If we were to go along without voting against these amendments, would it not in future be brought up against us, as the gentleman from New York just now quoted, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON]—would it not be said that we Democrats had voted for these measures when the Democrats in a majority Congress might seek to repeal them hereafter?

Mr. HOUSTON. If that be true, we would be furnished with an ample reason for our course in not so raising the question and precipitating a partisan discussion when we are utterly unable to carry our point and might defeat our whole work of revision. Just as the course which has just been referred to was justified by conditions then existing, just so can we justify our course in not raising these questions now.

Mr. HARDY. Then hereafter we would be put upon the defensive and made to explain our actions.

Mr. HOUSTON. Whenever the time comes, and I hope and trust it will soon come, when we will be responsible for legislation on this and all other subjects, then we will have no trouble in explaining and defending what is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and amendments thereto cease in five minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Make it ten minutes. I would like to have three minutes of that time.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Well, let us go on and then you may ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I understand the gentleman to withdraw his motion just now?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I want to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I do not want to use any of that time myself. The gentleman can have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania can not give it to me.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not want it myself.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman withhold it for five minutes.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The gentleman can take the floor in his own right.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the motion read ten minutes instead of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word in reference to this criticism that has been made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] upon the effort some of us are making to amend this bill. The idea that it is too sacred to be amended will all be dispelled if we read the title of the bill. The title of the bill is "To codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States." The purpose of this bill is to amend or repeal the laws of the United States, and we are simply exercising a prerogative which we have anyhow and which we have under the very title of the bill. Mr. Chairman, I think I can not do anything better to illustrate my objection to this provision than to read the language of a celebrated Democratic judge of the Supreme Court of the United States when one of these like provisions was before the court for decision. I refer to the opinion of Justice Field in the celebrated case of Ex parte Virginia (100 U. S. R., 369-370). These are his words:

> Those who regard the independence of the States in all their reserved powers—and this includes the independence of their legislative, judicial, and executive departments—as essential to the successful maintenance of our form of government, can not fail to view with the gravest apprehension for the future the indictment in a court of the United States of a judicial officer of a State for the manner in which he has discharged his duties under her laws, and of which she makes no complaint. The proceeding is a gross offense to the State; it is an attack upon her sovereignty in matters over which she has never surrendered her jurisdiction. The doctrine which sustains it, carried to its logical results, would degrade and sink her to the level of a mere local municipal corporation, for if Congress can render an officer of a State criminally liable for the manner in which he discharges his duties under her laws, it can prescribe the nature and extent of the penalty to which he shall be subjected on conviction; it may imprison him for life or punish him by removal from office. And if it can make the exclusion of persons from jury service on account of race or color a criminal offense, it can make their exclusion from office on that account also criminal; and, adopting the doctrine of the district judge in this case, the failure to appoint them to office will be presumptive evidence of their exclusion on that ground. To such a result are we logically led. The legislation of Congress is founded and is sustained by this court, as it seems to me, upon a theory as to what constitutes the equal protection of the laws, which is purely speculative, not warranted by any experience of the country, and not in accordance with the understanding of the people as to the meaning of those terms since the organization of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, this statute, which was denounced by a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States in 1875, ought to-day receive the same condemnation at the hands of the Congress of the United States. It should go to the regions of the past and be relegated simply as a memory of those dark and unfriendly days which disgraced this great Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this special amendment. I have been opposed to all the amendments which have been offered, and will be opposed to any material amendments which may be offered to this chapter, for I am aware there are gentlemen on this floor who are striving, and who will strive, to eliminate section by section, and piecemeal, the provisions of these ten sections from the nineteenth to the twenty-eighth, inclusive, which were enacted for the purpose of enforcing the fifteenth amendment of the Federal Constitution.

The gentlemen who favor this particular amendment are, in my judgment, mistaken in their construction of this section, which reads as follows:

> SEC. 23. No citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall be fined not more than $5,000.

It does not provide that the United States shall formulate and lay down laws and regulations for the qualification of jurors in the several States, but it does provide that when States do enact laws and formulate rules and regulations for the qualification of jurors there shall be no discrimination on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It was intended to protect negro citizens against unfair treatment on the part of white citizens. In fact, all these nine sections were placed on the books for the purpose of protecting black men in the rights given them by the fifteenth article of our Constitution.

These ten sections of the proposed codification, from 19 to 28, inclusive, were, as the title of this chapter indicates, enacted for the protection of citizens in their political and civil rights. They were passed in rather strenuous times and immediately after the adoption of the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution. They were supplemental to that amendment and were intended for its enforcement. It is also probable that in the minds of the men who drafted these sections they were to have special and local application, because the need of them was local, and, judging from the source from which the opposition to them comes now, they were correct in their views.

Section 19 provides for the punishment of bands of conspirators who, by violence or intimidation, prevent colored citizens from voting.

Section 20 provides for the punishment of those conspirators who commit murder, manslaughter, or other crimes in their efforts to prevent those colored citizens from voting.

Section 21 provides that colored people shall be accorded the same rights and privileges before the law as other people.

Section 22 provides for the protection of negro officers in the service of the United States in the discharge of their official duties. Those who conspire to prevent them from accepting or holding such offices and those who terrorize them and drive them from their positions and homes shall be punished.

Section 23 was intended to protect colored citizens in their right to sit on grand and petit juries; not that the United States Government should prescribe the qualifications of jurors, but the States having prescribed the qualifications, there should be no discrimination against colored citizens.

Section 24 provides for the punishment of any and every military, naval, or civil officer of the United States who orders troops or armed men to election places, except such as are necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep peace at the polls. It looks as if this was intended for the protection of whites as well as blacks in their right to vote.

Sections 25, 26, and 27 are to the same effect as section 24 and are amplifications of it. The purpose of all these sections was and is to protect all legally qualified citizens in their right of suffrage and to secure for them a fair vote and honest count.

Section 28 provides for the further punishment of those found guilty of the offenses prescribed in the preceding sections.

Notwithstanding the general terms in which some of these sections are couched, the clear intent and purpose of them all were to protect all qualified citizens, and especially colored citizens, in their right to vote, and to protect legally appointed and elected officers in the discharge of their official duties. The object of this particular legislation is so manifest that riders or amendments in the form of labor and industrial legislation, which may be wise and good in themselves, should not be incorporated into it. Such legislation is not germane or pertinent. It would mar the symmetry of this chapter and would give the courts much trouble in its construction and application.

Why are certain gentlemen so determined that this chapter be repealed, as a whole or in part? Simply because it has particular application to their part of the country. It is claimed that these sections should be repealed because they have fallen into innocuous desuetude, and it is urged that their recodification will revitalize them. I admit that they have not been kept fresh and green and enforced in the vigorous manner expected by the Congress which enacted this law. I admit they have been evaded, avoided, and broken times without number. I admit that if all the men who have transgressed these laws were visited with very mild punishment all the jails in the country would not accommodate the prisoners. But what is true of these sections is equally true of the fifteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. According to that the right of citizens of the United States to vote should not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and that Congress should have power to enforce that article by appropriate legislation. Unless you are ready to repeal the fifteenth amendment do not repeal this law, which applies to that article of the Constitution and which was provided for its enforcement.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DRISCOLL. I have only a minute. Why don't you gentlemen stand up here before Congress and before the country and agitate for the repeal of the fifteenth amendment? Some of you, in your own localities, may make the repeal of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments parts of your particular platforms in your particular districts, but no great party has ever yet had the temerity to insert it as a plank in its national platform, and I am surprised that any man on this floor, on either side, who does not represent a district included within the reconstructed States, should presume or dare to vote for the repeal of this law, which means in effect the repeal of the fifteenth amendment. For what force or effect can the provisions of that article have if there is no law by which it can be enforced, and if no punishment can be inflicted upon those who violate it? This law was enacted as a supplement to and as appropriate legislation for the enforcement of that amendment, and both should live or die together. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 61, noes 83.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 93.

So the motion was lost.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the entire section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 23.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 24. Every officer of the Army or Navy, or other person in the civil, military, or naval service of the United States, who orders, brings, keeps, or has under his authority or control any troops or armed men at any place where a general or special election is held in any State, unless such force be necessary to repel armed enemies of the United States or to keep the peace at the polls, shall be fined not more than $5,000 and imprisoned not more than five years.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After "polls," in line 15, add "when the President is called upon by the legislature of the State, if in session, or by the governor if the legislature be not in session.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like the Clerk to read the section as it would be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "polls," in line 15, the following:
"When the President is called upon by the legislature of the State, if in session, or by the governor if the legislature be not in session;" so that it will read: "To keep the peace at the polls, when the President is called upon by the legislature of the State, if in session, or by the governor if the legislature be not in session."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I assure the House that this amendment is not offered out of a spirit of resentment or rancor growing out of the civil war. That war was fought forty-two years ago. Most of us younger men on this side of the House were born after the fearful days of those unhappy times, and we can not quite enter into some of the feeling displayed by some Members on both sides; and we do hope that that kindly feeling which is uniformly shown by Members on both sides of the House in private conversation will manifest itself during the discussion of these statutes.

I have offered this amendment, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of giving the legislature, the governor, or the President if called upon, an opportunity to have troops keep the peace at polls. Now, mark you, we will all agree that Federal troops would have no right to keep the peace at the polls in the State of my friends from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD or Mr. POWERS] in case a prohibition election were held and the peace were being disturbed; yet this statute gives Federal troops that power to interfere in purely State elections unless you adopt the amendment I have offered. Now, if a President, Member of Congress, or amendment of the Constitution of the United States were being voted for, that power might be exercised and this statute then would operate; but in no case where a private prohibition law or other private election—purely a State election—is being held should the Federal troops be allowed to interfere unless asked for by the governor or the legislature. It ought to be repugnant to the States rights idea of every Republican, I think, on that side of the House. No harm can come to your State by placing this amendment on the statute. It provides that Federal troops shall not be used at the polls unless the President is called upon by the legislature when in session or by the governor when the legislature be not in session.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it practicable to codify the laws and at the same time correct all the crudities in the criminal laws?

Mr. COCKRAN. That is the object of revision.

Mr. WEBB. In answer to my friend from Illinois, I maintain that this committee, able and painstaking as it is and has been, is absolutely unable to carefully codify, revise, and amend the mass of law as it should be on the statute books, and that it ought not to be taken as an offense against the ability of the committee to present bona fide amendments.

Mr. MANN. Nobody questions that.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in their opening speeches invited proper amendments to this measure. And if this law should be amended, we can do it now as well as any time. This will be the last codification we will have in many years to come. In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom.

Mr. MANN. Sometimes.

Mr. WEBB. That is the theory of this Government anyway, that the majority should rule, and that in a multitude of counsel there is wisdom.

Mr. MANN. But you are not willing for the majority to rule, because you have discovered that the majority of this House does not sustain these propositions; yet they are still brought up here to take up time.

Mr. WEBB. I beg my friend's pardon. He will not say, surely, that I have filibustered for a moment, or that I have offered a single amendment to these statutes that has not been accepted.

Mr. MANN. I am not speaking of the gentleman in that respect.

Mr. WEBB. I hope he will not, because I have no purpose to retard the House in passing this bill. It ought to be passed, and I am acting in entire good faith in offering these amendments. I hope the gentleman will not charge me with any other motive.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe this bill will ever be passed, if we take time to correct all the little things in the law that ought to be corrected?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to the gentleman that we have six months, about every other day, in which to discuss these measures, and he is a good lawyer, and there are a great many good lawyers in this House, and we ought not to go along carelessly and pass a jumble of measures if any of them ought to be amended.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me—I do not wish to take his time——

Mr. WEBB. Go ahead.

Mr. MANN. There was a commission appointed to bring in a report for the codification of the laws. That commission reported.

Mr. WEBB. And did well, I think.

Mr. MANN. Did extremely poorly, in the opinion of most of the Members of the House.

Mr. WEBB. Not in my opinion, however.

Mr. MANN. That commission reported not a mere codification of the law, but a revision of the law, and when it was presented to this body it was looked upon with great suspicion, and never was entertained seriously for a moment so far as its passage was concerned; and thereupon the Committee on Revision of the Laws commenced its work, and a joint commission was appointed to codify the laws, and in the debate which took place in this House it was repeatedly stated that it was hoped that the new commission would confine itself to the codification of the law, and not attempt to revise the law. Now the gentlemen are proposing to revise the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman have five minutes longer. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us get back to the original proposition; and I want to ask my friend from Illinois a question. Do you oppose this amendment providing that Federal troops shall not interfere with purely State elections unless called upon by the legislature through the President, or by the governor of that State through the President, to do so?

Mr. MANN. I oppose every amendment that is offered that is partisan in its nature, on a codification of the law, when it is proposed to change a law that has been on the statute book for many years, and the gentleman has never introduced a bill to make a change. I shall vote against every proposition of that kind until I believe the codification bill has gone up in smoke. Then I am perfectly willing——

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from North Carolina yields to me.

Mr. WEBB. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COCKRAN. Suppose a statute has become obsolete, as a number of these statutes have become. Will not the passage of them here now be a practical reenactment of them?

Mr. MANN. A practical reenactment in one way; a theoretical reenactment, of course. The law will never have ceased. It will give them no additional force, not in the slightest degree. It will not make them live laws. It will not change their status in any way whatever, and the only question is whether we will put the penal code in one volume or whether we will scatter it through thirty or forty.

Mr. COCKRAN. I beg to differ with the gentleman as to the effect of reenactment here specifically, as to judicial construction.

Mr. WEBB. My friend from Illinois assumes too much. He assumes that this is a partisan amendment. I do not propose to introduce a single partisan amendment to this entire bill, and I can not for my life see how the gentleman from Illinois can reach the conclusion that this is a partisan amendment. It affects his State just as much as it affects North Carolina—both sovereign Commonwealths. I should think it would appeal to every Republican as well as to every Democrat who believes that his legislature or his governor ought to be consulted on everything affecting his own State affairs.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment may not be partisan, but when the House divides all the Democrats will vote for the amendment and all the Republicans against it.

Mr. COCKRAN. The gentleman's side can correct that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; we can correct it, but it is not for that side to correct anything.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Illinois is assuming too much when he says that if the House divides—which I hope it will not—that all the Republicans will vote against the amendment and all the Democrats for it. He will find on that side, I believe, Members in favor of this amendment. None of them, I dare say, would dare oppose such an amendment before their people.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that no one on that side ever votes for a proposition coming from this side.

Mr. WEBB. You have never offered one, nor has your side offered one so far in the consideration of this bill. My friend is making a partisan matter of a measure which I introduced in good faith. If gentlemen do not want to vote for it they can kill it, but I have no partisan rancor in my breast. It seems to me that it is an amendment that every Republican ought to be in favor of; every man who regards the wisdom of his own legislature and his governor ought to be willing to support an amendment providing that no troops shall come into his State to interfere in the affairs of his State unless requested by the legislature or the governor of the State. I hope the gentleman will not try to mystify and throw dust on this amendment by saying that it is a partisan measure.

I was born seven years after the war closed. Another war has been fought since then, and my State furnished the first blood shed under the flag that was threatened in 1898, and if war ever comes again, you will find from North Carolina and from every Southern State men who will give their best blood for the flag of the Republic. [Applause.]

Now I hope my friend from Illinois—because I know his usual fairness toward the South—will not try to make Members vote on this side or that side against the amendment on the ground that it is partisan. I hope that he will not assume that it is a partisan issue. I assure him that it is not, and he ought not to make such an argument before this House.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, in a somewhat modified form the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] brings up the most memorable question in some respects that was ever before the Congress of the United States. Twenty-nine years ago, when the Democratic party was just coming into power before the Forty-sixth Congress, the united Democracy of both Senate and House resolved that this section that it is proposed to reenact in this codification and other sections of like character of our Revised Statutes should be repealed. At the close of the session of the Forty-fifth Congress we found the then Democratic Senate voting against all the general appropriation bills in that Congress on the ground that it would never vote for another appropriation bill in this country to carry on the Government unless this section and section 2002 and other kindred sections were repealed.

Their proposition boiled down was that it should become a law and rule of the United States that the Army and Navy might be used to keep the peace, put down riots, preserve order on every day in the year except one, and that was the sacred day when elections were held, and on that day nobody was to interfere with the Democratic party in having or keeping up riot and bloodshed if it so desired. That was the grave proposition then.

The Forty-fifth Congress adjourned without making necessary appropriations, and a special session of the Forty-sixth Congress was called. The Forty-sixth Congress came in under a call of President Hayes, and I heard a distinguished gentleman on that side of the floor, on the opening of that special session, say that the Democrats would stand here until the marble of the Capitol crumbled into dust before they would vote another dollar to carry on the Government unless this section of the law was repealed, so that they could have their elections free from Federal interference in the South. But when they got hungry, the legislative bill not having passed, their pockets got empty, and they let in one bill to pay the Members [laughter], and, from time to time, although under the veto power of the President, the attempts to repeal the sections failed. We did not get enough appropriations to carry on the Government; and this section is the law of the land to-day. It has gone through all the intervening years and Congresses, but now my friend from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] wants to modify it. Then was the day for modification; there was no double siding and no compromise in those days.

The purpose was to repeal the sections absolutely and to take from the President the power to use the Army anywhere in the United States on election day—the effort was to take from the President his constitutional powers. A little bill, about 3 inches long, was agreed upon in the Democratic joint caucus of the Forty-sixth Congress and passed through both Houses of that Congress, taking away all the President's power over the Army on election days and to nullify these sections. The President vetoed it, and no such bill has been talked about, I believe, since. I hope we will stand by and leave the section under consideration, whether it be obsolete or not, stand as a monument of its greatness, thus upholding the Government in its strength and power, and the President in the exercise of the high duties given him by the Constitution of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division, demanded by Mr. WEBB, there were—ayes 51, noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 30. Whoever shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, any bond, bid, proposal, contract, guaranty, security, official bond, public record, affidavit, or other writing for the purpose of defrauding the United States; or shall utter or publish as true, or cause to be uttered or published as true, or have in his possession with the intent to utter or publish as true, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited bond, bid, proposal, contract, guaranty, security, official bond, public record, affidavit, or other writing, for the purpose of defrauding the United States, knowing the same to be false, forged, altered, or counterfeited; or shall transmit to, or present at, or cause or procure to be transmitted to, or presented at, the office of any officer of the United States, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited bond, bid, proposal, contract, guaranty, security, official bond, public record, affidavit, or other writing, knowing the same to be false, forged, altered, or counterfeited, for the purpose of defrauding the United States, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I observe that in the rewriting of these sections the revision committee, instead of following the language in the statutes, "or by both such punishments," or "or by both fine and imprisonment," simply put in the words "or both." I suppose the meaning is the same. I merely wish to call the attention of the gentlemen to the fact. I suppose the effort was to improve the phraseology. I do not think that effort met with success. It does not seem to me that the revisers have improved the reading at all. Upon the contrary, I do not think the reading is as good as it was before. Persons offending, according to this revision, "shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both." The "or both" is a shortening, of course, but certainly it is not as good phraseology as that ordinarily employed in the statutes, "or shall be punished by both such fine and imprisonment." I merely call the attention of the committee to the fact, not with the hope that there will be any change made. These gentlemen, I suppose, did their changing deliberately, and no doubt thought they were improving the statutes when they did it. I don't know exactly what led them to do it. I suppose it was the notion that this is better phraseology, and I presume the committee and the House will agree with them. I merely wish to say for myself that I think it is not as good phraseology. While they have saved a few words, I think that the composition is not so good as it was before, and the mere economy of a few words in the print is a small consideration when put against what seems to me to be the better expression. Neither do I think there is any improvement in saying "shall be fined and shall be imprisoned." I believe it is better to follow the old phraseology, "shall be punished by fine," "shall be punished by imprisonment." I think that in both particulars, while we have change and while we have comparative brevity, we have no improvement.

In order to get the matter in a little more concrete form, I move to amend by striking out the words "or both" and inserting "or by both such punishments."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 18, line 4, strike out the words "or both" and insert the words "or by both such punishments."

Mr. DE ARMOND. Mr. Chairman, I really would like to hear from some member of the committee on this general subject of change. It runs all through this revision. If there is a good reason for the wholesale change it does not occur to me. I would like to hear it; and if there be not, perhaps the gentleman will not be so tenacious as to insist upon it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this was done in the interests of uniformity. If he will look at the two sections on the opposite page, he will see that the language in each is different. Section 5418 says "by both such fine and imprisonment." Section 5419 says "by both such punishments." A great many other sections say "or both." Therefore, in the interests of uniformity we have adopted the method of saying always "or both," which is certainly perfectly clear.

Respecting the other provision, "by such fine or imprisonment," the language of existing statutes differs. Many of the statutes employ just the language we have employed. Some others do not, and in the line of uniformity alone we have made these changes, and it did seem to the committee then, and it seems to the committee now, that we have made the language of the statute perfectly clear.

Mr. DE ARMOND. The change in the general phraseology, it seems to me, makes still more objectionable the change to these two words "or both." Now, where the phraseology is "by fine or imprisonment," by fine of so much or imprisonment of certain length, or extent, or both, you have to supply practically everything to go with "both." What this means is, I suppose, or shall both be fined so much and imprisoned so long. You leave out really all of the essentials to be found somehow in a word that is not actually essential, the word "both." I do not contend that this does not mean—because evidently the gentleman intends it shall mean—what is meant by the fuller and more euphonious and more desirable statement. I am not talking of the legal effect of it, but what I am talking about is whether there is improvement in the change.

As to the matter of uniformity, I concede there is an argument for that, and I am not trying to combat that argument. What I am trying to suggest is that in the selection of expressions the committee was not happy in selecting the best; that it would have been better, for instance, to say "shall be punished by a fine" of so and so, or "imprisonment" so and so, or by fine and imprisonment. I merely call attention to it, not with a view of accomplishing anything in particular in so doing, but by the way of suggesting to the gentlemen of the Commission that they review this matter in their own minds at some leisure moment and conclude whether or not, to their own individual satisfaction, they might not have chosen a better way of expressing what they have expressed by the use of this terminology, "or both."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 31. Whoever shall falsely make, alter, forge, or counterfeit, or cause or procure to be falsely made, altered, forged, or counterfeited, or willingly aid or assist in the false making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, any deed, power of attorney, order, certificate, receipt, contract, or other writing, for the purpose of obtaining or receiving, or of enabling any other person, either directly or indirectly, to obtain or receive from the United States, or any of their officers or agents, any sum of money; or whoever shall utter or publish as true, or cause to be uttered or published as true, any such false, forged, altered, or counterfeited deed, power of attorney, order, certificate, receipt, contract, or other writing, with intent to defraud the United States, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged, or counterfeited; or whoever shall transmit to, or present at, or cause or procure to be transmitted to, or presented at, any office or officer of the Government of the United States, any deed, power of attorney, order, certificate, receipt, contract, or other writing, in support of, or in relation to, any account or claim, with intent to defraud the United States, knowing the same to be false, altered, forged, or counterfeited, shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. I notice in this section 31 that the word "contract" appears in several places. I do not know why it is put in unless it was not included in the other. Was there any good reason for inserting it now in view of the language used in the original section, where it used the words "or other writing?" Why put in the word "contract" now and enlarge the specification of the section?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will realize that a contract is an important thing to protect, and therefore it was felt that the Government needed that protection respecting the forgery of a contract as well as a deed. Now, with respect to the words "or other writing," the gentleman knows the general construction is that general language of that kind is confined and limited to the enumeration that precedes it. It is a general employment of language to cover any other writing of that kind.

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know as much as is attributed to me. I think the words "or other writing" were put in the original section to include unenumerated writings not specified in the original act, but putting in the word "contract" may not be objectionable unless it operates in some way as a limitation. I think "contract" was always included under the words "or other writing."

But I wish to ask another question. Looking to the top of page 19, in italicized words I find this: "Shall be fined not more than $1,000 and imprisoned not more than ten years." I have not had time to look at the original section to see its language as to the fine. Is that the same provision relating to punishment that was in the original act?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. The original act is right before the gentleman. There was an alternative punishment. The alternative punishment in the original act is this: "Shall be imprisoned at hard labor for a period of not less than one year or more than ten years, or shall be imprisoned not more than five years and fined not more than one thousand dollars." Now, it was the sense of the committee that there ought to be a uniformity and that there was no need for that alternative form of punishment.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection after the explanation, but I think it is always well to inquire when we find new legislation.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Oh, there is no question about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 33. Whoever, being an officer authorized to administer oaths or to take and certify acknowledgments, shall knowingly make any false acknowledgment, certificate, or statement concerning the appearance before him or the taking of an oath or affirmation by any person with respect to any proposal, contract, bond, undertaking, or other matter, submitted to, made with, or taken on behalf of, the United States, and concerning which an oath or affirmation is required by law or regulation, or with respect to the financial standing of any principal, surety, or other party to any such proposal, contract, bond, undertaking, or other instrument, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "or regulation" in line 19, page 19.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 19, page 19, strike out the words "or regulation."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, the objection I have to these words is that the section undertakes to make a criminal offense predicated upon a regulation made by a department or a chief of a bureau. We are now engaged in a codification of the penal code of the Federal Government, and this section is altogether a new section, so that the arguments that have been made by members of the committee against making changes in the context, of course, can not apply to this section. In my judgment the words "or regulation" in the section are nugatory. I do not believe that Congress has power to delegate to a department or to a bureau chief authority to make regulations which shall be the basis of a criminal prosecution. The first requirement of a criminal statute is certainty. There ought to be——

Mr. PARSONS. Has it not been decided that in cases where the statute authorizes the department to promulgate a regulation on any of these questions we can provide that a violation of the regulation shall be a crime?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it depends upon the character of the regulation.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman pardon me? I have the decision in the Williamson case, which is exactly the reverse of the suggestion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman is mistaken. It depends upon whether the regulation is within the purview of the statute or not. It would have been an improper regulation.

Mr. BONYNGE. That is the distinction.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends on the question as to whether the regulation is within the purview of the statute and whether the regulation is for the purpose of carrying out the statute, and if it is that character of regulation it is a regulation required by law and is covered by other language of the section. It is required by law. But here we have a provision predicating a crime upon a violation of a regulation. Unquestionably we have numerous regulations that are outside of statutes and that are not made for the purpose of carrying out statutes. They can not be made the basis of criminal prosecutions.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Certainly.

Mr. PARSONS. Would not the interpretation of this section mean that it referred only to a regulation that was required by law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, I do not know. In the Williamson case that was decided on Monday of last week, the United States circuit court upheld an indictment and conviction for subornation of perjury in the making of an affidavit that was required by a regulation promulgated by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, that authorized the Commissioner to make a regulation for the purpose of carrying into effect that statute to be good, but the Supreme Court of the United States held in that case the regulation was not made in pursuance of law, was not made for the purpose of carrying out the law, and in a sense was supplemental to the law. A regulation may be a requirement to carry into effect some detail that perhaps can not be carried into effect any other way. But I do not believe any regulation ought to be made the basis of a criminal prosecution when the law itself does not disclose what the crime is. The criminal laws of the country ought to embody the crime in clear and distinct terms; everything prohibited by law ought to be disclosed, so that the ordinary citizen may know what he may do and what he may not do. I do not believe that a Department regulation, that may be changed overnight, that may be subject altogether to the whim of a bureau chief, ought to be made the basis of criminal prosecution, and, therefore, of course I am against this proposition that has no qualification. If a qualification should follow the words "or regulation" such as "in pursuance of law," it might possibly be a valid provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, with most of the argument made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] I am in thorough accord. Like him, I do not like to see penal statutes based upon departmental regulations; but I do not think the particular section under consideration comes properly within the criticism made by the gentleman from Indiana. What that section punishes is the making by an officer authorized to administer oaths, of a false acknowledgment, or certificate, or statement, concerning the appearance before him of any person who is required to take an oath. Now, the regulation must provide for the taking of an oath, and this section simply punishes any officer who certifies falsely to the taking of an oath; and surely that ought to be punished, no matter when that is made.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me ask the gentleman. Suppose, now, the oath is required by a regulation that is not made in pursuance of law?

Mr. SHERLEY. Then my answer to the gentleman is that there can not possibly be any punishment of an officer for the making of a false statement in regard to a matter that the law does not touch.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is exactly the position of the court in the Williamson case.

Now, another question, if the gentleman will permit. If the regulation is made in pursuance of the law, then it is an oath that is required by law, and your provision would cover it, leaving out those words?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not entirely sure that the word "law" in this penal statute, which is to be construed strictly, would be held to embrace an oath required by regulation. Now, the use of the word "regulation" can do no harm, because if the regulation is not in accordance with law, but is a usurpation, then the certifying falsely to an oath made pursuant to that regulation can not be made a penal offense, whether we declare it or not; and it seems to me that these words simply make more certain the intention, without endangering in any way the rights of anybody.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman has in mind the fact that it cost several citizens of the State of Oregon a couple of years' time and a great deal of expense to have the question determined that an oath made in pursuance of a regulation that was not promulgated in pursuance of law did not constitute a crime. That is, the subornation of perjury in the taking of an oath of that kind. It involved certain citizens in a good deal of embarrassment, trouble, and expense, and I do not believe we ought to enact a penal statute so loosely. I think the question of regulation ought not to go in as a basis of crime at all. If the regulation is not in pursuance of law, then it is no law. If it is in pursuance of law, then it is law, and you do not need any regulation provision.

Mr. SHERLEY. The court would surely construe the word "regulation" to mean a lawful regulation, and if it was not, then there would be no crime committed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. But we are confronted all the time with the case that was decided a week ago Monday. The lower court decided otherwise, and it required the Supreme Court of the United States to undo the mistake. Should the citizen be subjected to such uncertainty as that in a penal statute?

Mr. SHERLEY. I am more than willing to have any proper restriction placed on the word "regulation," but I am inclined to think the effect of the gentleman's amendment, if adopted by the committee, would be to exclude those cases of false certifying where the oath was properly required by regulation, and that the gentleman does not desire to do, I am sure.

Mr. PARSONS. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the further fact that this section only punishes the officer who knowingly makes a false acknowledgment concerning the appearance before him, or the taking of an oath or affirmation by any person. It is not a case where he is in default on some regulation that he did not know about. It is a case where he knowingly does something which, morally at least, is wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] to strike out the words "or regulation," in line 19, page 19.

The question being taken, on a division [demanded by Mr. CRUMPACKER], there were—ayes 20, noes 40.

Accordingly, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I move now to amend the section by inserting after the word "regulation," in line 19, on page 19, the words "made in pursuance of law."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On Page 19, line 19, after the word "regulation," insert the words "made in pursuance of law."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is all right.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I understand the gentleman in charge of the bill has no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "acknowledgments," in line 12, section 33, page 19, the words "required of him by law;" and insert after the word "make," in line 14 of the same section, the word "therein."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would not presume to amend a section of the code of law that had stood the test of time and been construed by the courts, unless there was something extraordinary about it. But this section 33 seems to be new throughout; certainly in the matter of its language. It may fairly be read to make penal a certificate made by an officer authorized to administer oaths, whether it be one he is required to make by law or not. If he happens to be an officer authorized to administer oaths and makes a false certificate about something else than the law requires of him in his official character, he is still, under the language used, to be subject to a large fine and imprisonment as the section now reads.

I call the attention of the committee to this. My desire is to have it read so there will be no doubt about it. If my amendment is adopted it would read like this:

Whoever, being an officer authorized to administer oaths or to make and certify acknowledgments required of him by law, shall knowingly make therein any false acknowledgment, certificate, or statement concerning the appearance before him, etc.

If he is an officer authorized to administer oaths, then, if my amendments are agreed to, it must be some certificate he makes as to that administration of the oath or some other certificate, if the law provides for any such for the officer to make. I do not want to make it a penal offense against a notary public that he shall be punished for making a false certificate about a matter that his oath of office does not require him to make a certificate about at all. That is the purpose of my amendments, so as to confine it to the official acts or conduct of the officer. The draftsman of this bill has simply drawn it in a spirit of desire to reach the very question I suggest, and not make the thing sought to be made criminal an offense simply because the man is an officer.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this section is to punish any man who is authorized to administer an oath or take an acknowledgment who does administer an oath or take such acknowledgment, in matters where they are required by law, and then makes a false return. Now, a notary public is never required by law to administer an oath in matters that come within the purview of this section, but he is glad to administer an oath for the fee that he gets for doing it. If, as an officer qualified to administer an oath, he falsely administered it, the fact that he is not required by law to act in the matter has nothing to do with it; he ought to be punished if he falsely certifies to an oath, and the very amendment that the gentleman offers would vitiate the whole purpose of the section, and the amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. KEIFER. I want the gentleman from Kentucky to understand the purpose of my amendment. The statement of the gentleman from Kentucky as to the object of the section is undoubtedly right, but the section itself would be open to the construction that if the certificate was in reference to anything not required by law he would still be punishable. The section, if left to stand as it is in the bill, would be indefinite, and it would require the courts to construe it in litigation, and all that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 41. Whoever shall promise, offer, or give, or cause or procure to be promised, offered, or given, any money or other thing of value, or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money, or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any officer of the United States, or to any person acting for or on behalf of the United States in any official function, under or by authority of any department or office of the Government thereof, or to any officer or person acting for or on behalf of either House of Congress, or of any committee of either House, or both Houses thereof, with intent to influence his decision or action on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding which may at any time be pending, or which may by law be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place of trust or profit, or with intent to influence him to commit or aid in committing, or to collude in, or allow, any fraud, or make opportunity for the commission of any fraud, on the United States, or to induce him to do or omit to do any act in violation of his lawful duty, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, or caused or procured to be so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, and imprisoned not more than three years.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, in lines 10, 11, and 13, strike out the following: "Three times the amount of money or value of the things so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, or caused or procured to be so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "$10,000."

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment, I am not inspired by any hostility to the committee that has introduced this bill, nor is it my purpose to criticise the work of that committee. I am at this time a member of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, but was not a member of that committee when this bill was prepared, and hence claim none of the credit due for the provisions that it contains. I believe that this bill is a very great improvement upon the criminal law as it now stands, and will greatly simplify and improve the present criminal code. The greater part of this bill I gladly indorse, and will with pleasure support. But as the work of human hands is never perfect, neither is this bill perfect, but I believe will be greatly improved by the adoption of this amendment.

I understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] last week in his able address, explaining the work of this commission and the provisions of this bill, to invite the membership of this House to examine it carefully and to cooperate with the committee in trying, if possible, to make it more perfect.

The amendment that I now propose is offered in good faith, and I think is one that ought to be adopted. This section of the statute is aimed at bribery, and in the light of recent revelations in the United States it is a crime of the gravest import and one that I believe the people of this country desire to suppress. The municipalities of the United States, from ocean to ocean, have been found teeming with official corruption and a great many officers of the different cities have been prosecuted and convicted of accepting bribes.

State legislators have been accused of crimes, and some of them have been indicted and convicted. Within the last five years four United States Senators have been indicted for malfeasance in office, and two of them have been convicted by juries. I believe that officials as a rule are honest and conscientious, but recent events have established the fact that some are not. I know that the great majority of the American people are honest and that they want honest officers. It is the desire of the people of this country to adequately punish and suppress official corruption and to purify the public service, and I believe that much has been done in late years by the agitation of that question that has been going on throughout the length and breadth of the country. Many men, and officials, have been promoted to higher offices of honor and trust because of their zeal and their fidelity to the cause of the people in the prosecution of criminal officials.

The present governor of the State of New York won his popularity, which made him governor of that State, by unearthing and exposing the extravagance, the frauds, and the mismanagements of some of the great insurance companies of the country.

In the State from which I come, and which I have the honor in part to represent, the imperial State of Missouri, the present governor of that State won the popularity and distinction that made him the chief executive of that great Commonwealth by his honesty, fidelity, and zeal in the prosecution of official corruption in the city of St. Louis as its circuit attorney. Many men in recent years have been made Presidential possibilities by reason of their prosecution of crime in official life and by respecting and defending the rights and the safety of the people.

The effect of this amendment is simply to make definite and certain the punishment for this offense. The punishment as now provided by this bill is five years' imprisonment and a fine of three times the amount of the bribe offered.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARSONS. I would like to ask the gentleman where in the existing law the punishment he refers to is to be found?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. It is found in the preceding section.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; and the preceding section gives just the punishment which is found in section 41, which has been read. The preceding section referred to is section 5450, bribery of Members of Congress, and there the punishment is just the one we provided in this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. If I am in error it is the fault of this bill, as I read from the preceding section as it here appears; but whether that is correct or not the punishment as provided is fixed at three years' imprisonment and a maximum fine of three times the amount or value of the bribe that is offered.

Mr. PARSONS. The punishment now under section 5451, of which this is a paraphrase, is the same as it was in section 5450; 5451 provided that the punishment for bribery of any United States officer should be the same as in the preceeding section, which is section 5450, and that is the section relating to bribery of Members of Congress, and the punishment there reads thus:

> Shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, or cause to be procured to be so offered, promised, given, made, or tendered, and imprisoned not more than three years.

That is the very language we have inserted in this section. We had to insert it in this section because what was the preceding section in the Revised Statutes is now placed under another chapter, and we could not refer to it here; so we had to insert the punishment verbatim.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Whether this proposed bill changes the existing law or not can make no difference with the point that I make. The fine ought to be made a fixed sum and ought not to be, as this bill now reads, three times the amount of the bribe that may be offered, for the very good and sufficient reason that the value of the bribe offered may not be susceptible of accurate ascertainment.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. How can you prove the bribe without proving the amount?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I answer that you can bribe a man with a railroad pass, but how will you determine the value of that pass? The value of the pass depends upon how much you use it. If it is not used at all, it has no value, but if it is used frequently and extensively, it has a great value.

Bribes might be offered, or given, in some character of property, as a cane, a ring, or a watch, where the value of the reward thus given would be a matter requiring the investigation of the court trying the case before it could determine the maximum fine that should be imposed.

Mr. Chairman, I insist that the fine to be inflicted for a crime so grave as the bribing of a public officer ought to be fixed at some definite sum, say $1,000, $5,000, or $10,000, but do not fix it at three times the amount of the bribe offered, because that is uncertain, indefinite, and can not be accurately ascertained.

Mr. PARSONS. The difficulty with the gentleman's amendment is illustrated by the Greene and Gaynor cases, where they obtained several hundred thousand dollars and were fined, I believe, several hundred thousand dollars in addition to imprisonment. Now, in those cases a punishment of only $10,000 fine would be no fine at all, and would not compare with the offense.

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Then make the maximum fine larger; make it $100,000 if $10,000 is not large enough.

If a railroad pass is offered to a man as a bribe for his vote or other official action you could not under this law fine the bribe giver even $10 without showing to what extent he had used the pass, as that alone would establish its value. This would require a separate investigation by the court and prove to be very difficult, if not impossible, to fairly arrive at the value of the bribe given.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. What would the gentleman say to a suggestion to make the fine not less than $10,000?

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. I have no objections to that. My amendment is asking to make the maximum $10,000, but I will be satisfied with any other definite sum that is large enough to be commensurate with this character of crime.

Mr. Chairman, I for one am not willing that this, the Sixtieth Congress, shall announce to the world that it is disposed to weaken or lightly consider the law creating the crime of official bribery, nor to impose a fine that is trivial, indefinite, or inadequate for its infraction. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out the words "three years," in section 41, page 24, and insert "ten years, and shall be disqualified thereafter from holding any office of honor or profit under the Government of the United States."

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to increase the penalty imposed by the section as it stands for the heinous crime of bribing an officer of the United States, a penalty which, in my judgment, is wholly inadequate, or at least may be wholly inadequate under such circumstances as the gentleman from Missouri has suggested. I think the section is open particularly to objection in that it leaves a person who has corrupted a public officer, and thus debauched the Government, eligible to hold the highest office under the same Government. Under the law as reported by the committee, while the bribe taker would be excluded from the public service, the bribe giver would remain entirely eligible. I believe the bribe giver quite as bad and often worse than the bribe taker. I think it would be monstrous to leave the bribe taker disqualified and the bribe giver eligible. I think both should be condemned to the same infamy, and for that reason I press my amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, this language reads that the man who violates the provisions of this statute shall be fined "not more" than three times the amount of the money or the value of the thing offered as a bribe. That leaves it with the court to fine him anything less than three times the amount. The court might fine him $1.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all free institutions in a country resting upon popular suffrage rest upon the intelligence and the integrity of the citizen. In a certain sense, therefore, the highest crime that can be committed in a country like ours, except actually waging war against the Constitution, would be corrupting legislation or the administrators of justice. Now, this is a fine that may be next to nothing; may be 25 cents.

Mr. Speaker, the old law read, when it got down to where this language comes, "shall be punished as prescribed in the preceding section," and that punishment prescribed in the preceding section was not more than $10,000 nor imprisonment more than five years.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. We cut out the preceding section—5450.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg your pardon. The chairman of the committee informs me that the preceding section referred to in this was cut out.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Put in another place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know, therefore, what the penalty in the preceding section stricken out was.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Exactly this.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. The same penalty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the chairman tells me it was the same as occurs now in section 40.

Mr. HOUSTON. The same as in section 41.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. That is existing law exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I understand now that the preceding section at the time that this was taken up by the Commission prescribed the same penalty as is now prescribed in the section that I am discussing. That changes the comparison that I was going to make, but it does not change my objection to the language of this penalty, which is "not more than three times the amount or value" of the thing offered as a bribe. It seems to me it ought to be "not less than three times the amount." Next to treason itself this is the greatest crime in a free republic. Nay, it is even a form of treason, because it poisons our institutions at the fountainhead of the river.

If the present motion is voted down I shall move to strike out the word "more" and to substitute the word "less."

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized and has the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Tennessee desires the floor, he is entitled to it.

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we are here legislating upon the bribing of Members of Congress. If anything of that kind has been done for a long time I am not aware of it, but this is a good law and ought to be enforced. I have this in mind: We should not only punish the man who takes the bribe and the man who gives the bribe, but the lobbyist who helps the bribe giver and is possibly the bribe giver himself. Now, I want to ask my distinguished friend in charge of this bill, Is there any Federal law on the subject of lobbying? Does my friend from Pennsylvania know of any?

Mr. MOON of Pennsylvania. I do not know that I exactly know what the gentleman means by the term "lobbying." There is no such language in the penal statutes of the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Then I beg the indulgence of the committee. I do not want to take up too much of your time. Just let me read now, in your hearing, something that you ought to hear.

Bouvier treats the subject thus:

LOBBYIST.

One who makes it a business to procure the passage of bills pending before a legislative body.

One "who makes it a business to 'see' members and procure by persuasion, importunity, or the use of inducements, the passage of bills, public as well as private, which involve gain to the promoters." (1 Bryce, Am. Com., 156.)

A contract for the employment of personal influence or solicitation to procure the passage of a public or private law is void (21 Barb., 361; 16 How., 314; 34 Vt., 274; 15 Oreg., 330) as contrary to morals and tending to inefficiency in the public service (93 Wis., 393); if by its terms or by necessary implication it stipulates for, or tends to, corrupt action or personal solicitations (69 U. S., 45; 98 Ind., 238; 36 N. Y., 235; 45 id., 543; 127 id., 370; 18 Ohio St., 469; 149 Pa., 375). And, if the contract is broad enough to cover services of any kind, either secret or open, honest or dishonest, the law pronounces a ban upon the contract itself. (2 McArth., 268.) It is not required that it tends to corruption. If its effect is to mislead, it is decisive against the claimant. It may not corrupt all, but if it corrupt or tend to corrupt some, or if it deceive or tend to deceive some, that is sufficient to stamp its character with the seal of reprobation before a judicial tribunal. (5 W. & S., 315; 7 id., 152; 59 Pa., 19; 100 id., 561.) But it has been held that though the contract contemplates the use of personal solicitation, yet if no personal influence is brought to bear upon the members, and no dishonest, secret, or unfair means employed, to accomplish the object, it is not illegal. (86 Cal., 542.)

Where the agreement is for compensation contingent upon success, it suggests the use of sinister and corrupt means for the accomplishment of the desired end. The law meets the suggestion of evil and strikes down the contract from its inception. (69 U. S., 45; 98 Ind., 238.)

I now read from an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered in 1874, Trist v. Child, 88 U. S. Reports, 441 to 453. Trist had a claim against the Federal Government. He employed Child to collect his claim from Congress. They were both men of good character. Child was to be paid nothing if he failed to collect. The claim was collected and Child had to sue for his commission. The lower court allowed him pay for his services, but the Supreme Court dismissed the bill because he had lobbied with Congress to procure the appropriation. The proof showed that Child did "lobby." Mr. Justice Swan, for the whole court, in dismissing the bill on lobbying and lobby contracts, with great force said:

But there is an objection of STILL GREATER GRAVITY TO THE APPELLEE'S CASE.
